3½ Billion Defense Tax Bill Passes Senate, 67-5

5 Million Returns Added to Structure; Community Property Change Is Defeated

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The Senate yesterday by a vote of 67 to 5 approved a $3,580,000,000 all-time load of new taxes for defense.

Increasing revenue expectations to 13 billion dollars and covering nearly five million new returns into the Federal tax structure, the bill now awaits only conference agreement.

Passage came after leaders capitulated to community property State Senators fighting withdrawal of special tax privileges from eight States. A 53 million dollar revenue loss resulted.

Pleased with passage ahead of schedule in three days, Majority Leader Barkley granted Senators a two-week recess from business.

Conference Wednesday

The House, now on vacation until September 15, arranged through its leaders for informal appointment of conferees to iron out differences in House and Senate taxes. First conference was set for Wednesday and final House passage is due early next week.

The bill carries a record burden of individual and corporate surtaxes, a new low personal exemption level ($750 for single and $1500 for married persons), a 10 per cent increase in excess profits rates and a wide sweep of excise and miscellaneous taxes ranging from a $5 use tax on autos to 10 per cent levies on telephone bills.

House Total Exceeded

As sent back to the House, the measure embraced $90,900,000 less revenue than when the Finance Committee reported it, but still towered $264,900,000 above the House bill total. A $48,900,000 loss from admission tax revision, plus elimination of community property taxes, accounted for the lowered Senate figure.

Passage was sped by postponing many pending tax projects for consideration in a new "administrative" tax bill to follow in a few weeks. In this bill, Chairman George of the Finance Committee said, community property taxes will be considered anew, plus a Treasury-proposed

Adopted Babies Above Average I. Q., Expert Says

Evanston, Ill., Sept. 5 (AP).—Adopted babies born to mothers of low intelligence and fathers in inferior occupations turn out to be as intelligent as, if not more so than average children in the population as a whole.

This was reported today to the American Psychological Association by Dr. Harold M. Skeels of the University of Iowa who based the finding on a study of intelligence quotients of adopted infants with known inferior social histories. Results, he said, led him to conclude that:

"Low intelligence of true mothers, or low occupational status of the true fathers or a combination of both should not be considered as a deterrent in the placing of infants in adopted homes."

U. S. Attitude Toward Japan?

The last five weeks have been packed with new and serious developments in American relations with Japan: Move into Indo-China, and bomb damage to the U. S. Tutuila and the Yangtze patrol.

Five weeks ago the Gallup Poll reported 51% of the voters favored taking steps to keep Japan from becoming more powerful even at the risk of war with Japan. In view of recent developments, what is America's attitude now? See the Gallup Poll in Sunday's Post.

Guns For Soldiers

Copyright, 1941, by The Washington Post

THE FIRST wars were fought on land, by hairy gentlemen wielding clubs and rocks. In the age of the Phoenicians and Norsemen came war on the seas, and, in our own age, war in the skies.

For the first time in the long and bloody history of human conflict, the airplane made it possible to strike, not only at a foe's army and navy, but at his citizenry, his women and children, and at his industrial plants and his cultural monuments.

And with the airplane, at least as employed by such as Adolf Hitler, came a new branch of defense—Civilian Defense.

The GHQ for America's Office of Civilian Defense is at 2000 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, the old red-brick mansion off Dupont Circle that once was the home of Senator James G. Blaine, the "Plumed Knight." Here in the high-ceilinged rooms toil some 100 Government employes, the headquarters force in a "new army . . . with a big job to do." These employes work hard, and to save time they eat luncheon at their desks.

THE INCONGRUOUS thing about this new branch of defense is that the commanding officer, Mayor Fiorello Henry LaGuardia, is on a part-time basis. He is running this particular GHQ, it might be said, with his left hand, while his right takes care of the office of Mayor of New York, admittedly the toughest public office in the United States next to the Presidency.

LaGuardia Rushes Here Each Week

Nor is that all. Not only is the fiery and bustling LaGuardia holding down the formidable jobs of Mayor of New York and Director of the Office of Civilian Defense, he also is carrying on as head of the Permanent Joint Committee on Defense with Canada and as president of the United States Conference of Mayors. Alongside the record of such a whirlwind as Fiorello the old gag about the one-armed paperhanger seems like bush-league stuff, particularly at a time like this when LaGuardia is campaigning for a third term as mayor.

They say at the headquarters of OCD that Mayor LaGuardia (or Director LaGuardia) comes here every week. He usually arrives on a Tuesday. An OCD automobile picks him up at the airport and rushes him to Blaine mansion. He works well into the evening. Then on Thursday—sometimes it is a Friday—he flies back to New York.

Last week he stayed here only one day, Thursday, but this, it is explained, was because he was making defense speeches elsewhere.

NOBODY HAS ever questioned LaGuardia's ability or his awesome energy. Besides his better-known talents, he can fly an airplane, cook spaghetti, direct firefighters and lead a symphony orchestra. He has been photographed doing all these things, and a few others besides.

Period Of Apathy Follows

What has been, and is being questioned is whether the job of Director of the Office of Civilian Defense is a job to be administered as a sideline, with one hand, so to speak. LaGuardia himself says it is "a big job." President Roosevelt has expressed himself in much the same terms, and Ernest K. Lindley, the President's biographer, has called it "the unwieldiest assignment in the whole defense administration."

If that is so, then there would seem to be no more reason to make it a part-time job than there would be to make Gen. George C. Marshall's post as Army Chief of Staff a part-time job.

The fact is that there are thousands of would-be volunteers in the United States—particularly women—who are anxious to do something on the civilian defense front, and who haven't yet found anything to do.

Officials at the headquarters of the OCD admit this, but they insist that plans to outline what volunteers can do are being prepared as hurriedly as possible. The organization is operating with an initial appropriation of $900,000, made available in May.

TO THE CYNICAL argument that the country is apathetic to the defense program, there came a resounding answer last July when Americans contributed 15 million pounds of "pots and pans" to make up for a threatened shortage in aluminum.

The OCD estimated that more than one million persons participated actively in the aluminum collection campaign.

Since then, it is admitted, there has been a let-down.

At the outset, when the covolian defense setup was being formed, entirely too much emphasis was placed on the idea of preparing against air raids. There were cries of "hysteria" and "freightening the American people."

This, it must be said, was no fault of Mayor LaGuardia. He said back in May that the odds were 20 to 1 against an American city being bombed. In June he said that even if air raids should come, they would be sudden, surprise attacks such as England has suffered. The main thing to guard against in such circumstances, he said, was the damage resulting from panic.

Will Take No Chances On Raids

The fact is that nobody can say with certainty that American cities will one day be bombed. But neither can anybody say with certainty that they won't be bombed. The question confronting President Roosevelt last spring was whether to do something about civilian defense or do nothing. He chose to do something and created hte OCD.

THE PRESIDENT was not depending on the old and dangerous idea of William Jennings Bryan that "a million men will spring to arms"—even though in this case the volunteers needed will not be expected to bear arms.

In the view of Mr. Roosevelt, one of the chief tasks of OCD is to make "every family" realize the grim meaning of modern war.

"It is a war between populations and not alone between armies," the President said on July 24 at a White House conference of 45 leaders of voluntary civilian defense work. "People in this country unfortunately haven't got enough idea of what modern war means."

Even more important than the tasks of air-raid wardens, fire wardens

Subcommittee Named to Set Standard for 1-Cent Milk

Undaunted by technical obstacles put in their way by an Agricultural Department official, a group of Washingtonians yesterday adopted new measures toward obtaining a one-cent milk program for needy school children.

At a meeting of the District Nutrition Committee, Mrs. Elizabeth Grant, chairman, appointed a subcommittee which will seek to define the low-income standard which would determine eligibility of youngsters to buy penny half-pints.

Simultaneously, Robert L. Haycock, acting superintendent of schols, announced he would urge the Board of Education at its meeting on Wednesday to name a committee to work out all phases of participation in the proposed "penny project"—schools to be selected, finances, etc.

Present at the luncheon meeting, held at the Y. W. C. A., to answer questions was Leon J. Steck, of the Surplus Marketing Administration. This is the bureau which administers relief milk programs through-

Finnish Account

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 5.—German siege guns are shelling Leningrad, the Germans said tonight, and an official Finnish announcement from Helsinki said that tremendous fires in the great city were visible at the Finnish border, 15 miles away.

Nazi forces were declared to be blasting closer to the second city of the Soviet Union through fierce tank and artillery resistance.

Schluesselburg, 25 miles to the east of Leningrad on the shore of Lake Ladoga, and the railway which connects it with Leningrad were said by a Nazi spokesman also to be undergoing a heavy pounding by long-range artillery.

This indicated that Leningrad was cut off from road and rail communication with the rest of Russia.

Finns Use Border Zone

The announcement of fires raging in Leningrad was issued by the official state information bureau in Helsinki. Its account was based on eyewitness reports from Finnish civilians fleeting from the Russian area running from Leningrad to the Finnish border.

These Finns, called "Ingrians," number 250,000 and they have been long-time residents of the area between Leningrad and the Finnish border.

They reported a large number of Russians have fled from the district immediately around Leningrad to the besieged city itself.

All buildings have been put into use for billeting, and even then room has not been found for all, the Finnish announcement said.

"Innumerable persons spend the nights in parks under trees and bushes wrapped only in their own clothing. The suburbs of Leningrad are crowded with so many people that hundreds spend their time in fields," it added

There were no authentic reports on the exact location of the lines beyond recent statements that the Germans had fought to within 20 miles of Leningrad, which would be within artillery range.

Pressing down from the north, the Finns were said to be approaching Terijoki and Kuokkala, some 18 miles northwest of Leningrad. Occupation of the towns would put them within artillery range of Kronstadt, which defends the inner

No Flowers From the Army

Plane Victim's Parents Got a Quit-Claim

By the Associated Press

Hempstead, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Mrs. Arthur Kramer, mother of Georgene, 3, one of three children fatally burned Tuesday when an Army pursuit plane crashed near their their home, wrote Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt today asking her to use her influence in barring planes from flying over congested areas.

"In this great country of ours there is room for practice fields. Keep the planes from our children—get adequately trained pilots," she wrote in the letter which also criticized the attitude of the Army toward the accident.

As Mrs. Kramer penned her letter, Mitchel Field issued a statement absolving Second Lieut. Roy W. Scott, of Needham, Mass., from blame for the accident. The statement emphasized the flight was one of thousands made from the field and that accidents were rare.

The other children who died of burns inflicted by the planes flaming gasoline were Pauline Cuccio, 8, and her brother, Jasper, 5.

Writing of her daughter's funeral, Mrs. Kramer told Mrs. Roosevelt "her little coffin was covered with flowers from everyone who knew and loved her and the presence of our friends and family was there to sustain us, but not a word of condolence, not one little flower from God's gleaming, sunlit world came from the United States Army.

GEORGENE KRAMER

"About one-half hour after the children were rushed to the hospital mortally injured and hideously disfigured a second lieutenant—a shavetail—came to our home. He dared to thrust a paper into the badly burned hands of the doctor (Dr. I. Arthur Kramer, her husband) and said 'sign here for no property damage.' Our children—my golden girl—were dying and the Army was worried whether the house was injured—whether they would be held liable."

"So there you are," Mrs. Kramer wrote. "Three children's lives snuffed out—have our children died in vain? Or will there be more little graves for the green grass to grow over some spring? There must be a complete investigation made. I, as a citizen, demand it. It must never happen again. We must protect our little ones. Army planes fly too low."

Winslow, Ariz., Sept. 5 (U.P.).—A two-motored Army plane crashed in a residential district on the outskirts of Winslow late today, seriously injuring a woman in whose yard the plane fell and one of five men aboard the craft.

The woman was Mrs. Nazario Garcia, 68, who was thrown against the kitchen stove.

Private D. D. Melton, McClellan Field, Calif., suffered head cuts.

Request for Health

More than three-and-a-half million dollars are needed for protection of Washington's health and treatment of its needy sick, according to estimates for the next fiscal year submitted by the District Health Department yesterday.

The report, submitted to the District Commissioners, requested a total of $3,530,788, as against $3,110,507 for this year—an increase of about 13 per cent.

The most outstanding request for funds made was for medical services in hospitals, clinics and schools. This embodied prevention and spread of contagious diseases; maintenance of tuberculosis and venereal disease clinics and dispensaries; hygiene and sanitation work, including free dental clinics, and maintenance of maternal and child health service.

For this service, $649,815 was asked as against $462,382 for this year. The welfare board proposed that $224,232, as against $164,473, be allotted for nursing and medical supplies; more than $166,000 for medical inspection of schools and equipment; for child welfare, . . .

Pecora Signs Writ

Poles Attach 64 Million in French Gold

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Sept. 5.—Charging that the gold reserves of the Central Bank of Poland that were transported to France just ahead of the German invasion of Warsaw later were permitted to fall into the hands of the Nazis, the Polish bank has obtained a writ of attachment against $64,050,641 of the vast store of French gold here, it became known today.

The writ was signed by Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand S. Pecora, and served on officials of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, in their capacity as custodians of the one billion dollars of French gold under earmark here. Last February, officials of the Bank of Belgium, acting under the authority of the Belgian government in exile, attached 260 million dollars of French gold here.

The action revealed the carefully kept secret as to what became of the Polish gold. Polish government officials in the United States, who long had maintained silence on the whereabouts of the gold reserves of the Bank of Poland, at last were free to discuss the matter. Even the legal moves leading up to the serving of the writ of attachment had been concealed.

Nazis Reported Granted Bizerte

London (Saturday), Sept. 6 (INS). Marshal Petain has granted German troops the use of the Tunisian Mediterranean naval base of Bizerte, according to a dispatch carried in the London Daily Express today.

Hitler's Dream Upset, Tokyo Paper Says

Victory Within Allies' Grasp, Editor Holds; Allowed to Circulate

(Second U. S. Tanker Reaches Vladivostok—Page 5)

By the United Press

Tokyo (Saturday), Sept. 6.—The Japan News Week, which often reflects the view of the foreign office, surprisingly published strongly anti-Axis editorial comment today and several hours after it had appeared on newsstands had not been suppressed by police.

News Week asserted that the situation ushering in the third year of the war was such that although it did not indicate that the "Nazi's ill-founded plans have been defeated, it does mean that German momentum has been definitely arrested and that by the end of this third year the finish of the horrible carnage should be within the grasp of the Allies."

Calls Hitler Fallible

News Week said that however well Adolf Hitler may have thought he planned his march to world domination, it now was quite apparent that he is fallible. The second year of the war, it said, proved that Hitler erred in thinking that the Luftwaffe could blast England into submission and that the end of the second year found "an expanded R. A. F. attacking at will vital spots in Germany and occupied France."

"The subsequent failure to drive British shipping from the Atlantic must have been more bitter yet," News Week said. "Perhaps no less disheartening to the chancellor is the slow progress being made in the attempt to subjugate the mighty Red Army of the Soviet Union. While the chancellor may well view with alarm the military situation he now faces, it perhaps is less immediately disturbing to him than growing evidences of the complete rejection by conquered countries of the Nazi scheme for a new world order."

St. Elizabeths Tries Drama As a Cure for Mental Ills

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

It is called 'psychodrama,"

An ingenious invention whose purpose is to help cure the person suffering from mental disorder, four psychodrama "plays" were presented yesterday at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

The audience was composed of members of the American Occupational Therapy Association, a New York newspaperman and the writer. It was the first time a Washington reporter had been admitted to an actual performance in the special theater at St. Elizabeths, he was told.

To witness the practice of play-acting as a form of treatment for diseases of the mind, when only a few years ago it was thought that the strap and straightjacket were the only "cures"; to see how readily even seriously ill patients get into the spirit of the thing—well, it's something to get excited about.

Director of yesterday's demonstration was Dr. J. L. Moreno, who introduced this specialized form of therapy at New York's Beacon Hill Hospital about six years ago. The psychodrama theater established at St. Elizabeths last February is the second in the United States.

For the casts of his four short playlets yesterday Dr. Moreno chose three men and three women patients, suffering from different types of mental disorder. Some have been patients only a few months, others for several years. Some may be discharged in the near future, others are in for some time to come.

The opening performance was by a young man, formerly a Government worker. He reenacted a scene that occurred in his home when he was on visiting leave recently. A nurse impersonated his wife, serving as an "auxiliary ego," as Dr.

Nelson Himself May Be Answer To Defense Job, Says Baruch

By W. H. Lawrence
Copyright by New York Times

Bernard M. Baruch, 1918 chairman of the War Industries Board, conferred with Donald M. Nelson for two hours yesterday and told reporters later that Nelson, the executive secretary of the new Supply, Priorities and Allocations Board, may "furnish in himself the solution of the need for one-man control of defense under the President."

Baruch, who Thursday emerged from a White House luncheon with the President to call SPAB "a faltering step forward" but still short of the one-man control he considers essential, received from Mr. Nelson a detailed outline of the plans which SPAB will be asked to adopt in curtailing the manufacture of civilian goods to put more men and machines at work on the job of speeding arms for the United States forces, Great Britain, China and Russia.

The nature of Nelson's plans were not revealed publicly but after their

Repeated Attacks Were Made on U. S. Destroyer by Day, Roosevelt Reveals (Drug Contracts with German Dye Trust Voided—Page 19).

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt said yesterday that American naval forces had been ordered to "eliminate" the submarine which attacked the U. S. S. Greer, while a dispatch from Iceland indicated that the U-boat may have been sunk soon after it fired torpedoes at the American destroyer.

Members of the Greer's crew, arriving in Reykjavik yesterday, told the Associated Press that the destroyer's instruments indicated she was directly above the submarine when her depth charges were released.

The destroyer was in very deep water at the time, they added, and the U-boat may have been sunk without trace.

The Associated Press dispatch described the attacking submarine as German, but did not amplify the statement.

Passed by Censors

The dispatch was sent by Drew Middleton, a veteran of both the Battle of France and the Battle of Britain, and was cleared through the Anglo-American censoship in Iceland.

Meanwhile there was unofficial speculation in Washington over the possibility that the Atlantic fleet might now have orders to destroy any Axis submarine encountered between the North American coast and Iceland.

The U-boat which attacked the Greer, it was pointed out here, could not be distinguished from any other submarine which might be sighted by an American warship or plane.

President Roosevelt left little doubt at his press conference yesterday that he believes the U-boat commander was aware of the Greer's identity.

More Than One Attack

Without waiting for reporters to question him on the encounter, Mr. Roosevelt opened his conference by saying that there was more than one torpedo attack and that they occurred in daylight.

Later, in answer to a question as to the exact hour of the engagement, he said visibility was good. The Greer was flying the American flag, he pointed out, and carried distinctive identification numerals at the bow.

"As a landlubber to a sea expert," a correspondent inquired, "Could a submarine make a mis-

Gas-Shortage Threat Not Ended, OPC Official Says

That the shortage of gas in the East may not be ended by Thursday's agreement between representatives of the railroad and oil industries, was indicated last night by the Office of Petroleum Coordinator.

"They may have the best intentions," said one official, "but the supplies they can handle will be limited. The oil companies are faced with a shortage of trackage, unloading facilities, and storage tanks. No matter how many railroad cars they get, they don't have the facilities to unload it all."

He said that while there was a large supply of storage tanks, they are located on the seaboard, and that there probably is an inadequate number of storage tanks, inland.

take in broad daylight at torpedo distance?"

If the submarine's periscope were above the surface, Mr. Roosevelt replied, there could be no excuse for failing to identify the Greer as an American ship.

He acknowledged that submarines sometimes aim their torpedoes at sounds registered by their listening devices, without rising to the surface, but indicated he would take a grave view of such an attack in waters where American ships are known to be operating.

The President mentioned Germany only once in the course of his discussion of the attack on the Greer, when he said that all submarines, including the German and Italian, have listening equipment which enables them to aim torpedoes without sighting their target through the periscope.

The A. P. story from Iceland quoted officers and crew members of the Greer as saying that British aircraft helped them ward off the U-boat attack.

Navy Department spokesmen here would not confirm or deny the account of the engagement given by Middleton.

President Roosevelt said the attack took place on the American side of the ocean. When asked if the encounter might also have taken place in the German-proclaimed blockade zone, which extends west of Iceland to within 3 miles of Greenland, the President said the United States did not recognize such a zone.

Everyone knows, he added, that a blockade has no meaning unless it is effective.

In discussing the countermeasures against the sub, the President made it plain that the fact that the Greer sustained no casualties or damage did not mean that the attack would be passed off lightly.

He told reporters he was reminded of a story of some children on their way to a country school who were fired upon by someone from bushes. The father of the children saw no reason even to search the bushes, the President said, because the children had not been hit.

The Administration does not sympathize with the father's attitude, the President continued, and has ordered a search of the bushes.

When asked what steps would be taken if the submarine were found, Mr. Roosevelt promptly replied that the Navy would try to "eliminate" the marauder. He gave reporters permission to quote him directly, adding that eliminate is a good word.

The President showed some impatience when a reporter asked if the engagement in the North Atlantic should be classified as shooting war. That was a hypothetical question, he said.

A Challenge to U. S., British Press Says

By the United Press

London (Saturday), Sept. 6.—Some British newspapers today interpreted the submarine attack on the U. S. S. Greer as the first direct challenge to the United States by Germany, and commented that the U-boat commander "provided the reminder that America needed that the war was near her shores."

sea approach to Leningrad.

A high command statement that Estonia had been mopped up indicated that German forces in the north were now free to devote their whole attention to Leningrad, the main objective. The Estonian islands of Dagoe and Oesel, where Russians were still holding out, presented a problem to German air and naval units.

In the middle sector facing Moscow, where the Russians have made strong counterattacks, DNB claimed that between August 25 and September 4 two German army corps took over 30,000 prisoners and captured or destroyed 160 tanks. The Russians were said to have lost more than 200 guns and several hundred vehicles of all types.

Vague dispatches from other sections of the Eastern Front reported that an army corps in the middle sector ha dtaken 17,300 prisoners and destroyed or captured 121 tanks, including 30 of the heaviest type.

Another army corps in the course of two weeks was credited with 13,700 prisoners, 26 tanks and 115 cannon.

Although the spokesman said he couldn't mention place names on the central sector he declared: "You may be sure the operations are very successful. For one thing, there have been extensive territorial gains not mentioned by the high command."

Finns Report Fires Raging

Helsinki, Sept. 5 (AP).—A Finnish communique said tonight that big fires, which could be seen from the Finnish border, were raging in Leningrad. The communique added:

"Traffic in the Leningrad area is in a state of confusion. A locomotive engineer who left Leningrad September 1 related that railway traffic had ceased then, all railways leading out of the city being either in enemy hands or so badly damaged they could not be repaired for traffic.

"It is becoming impossible to procure food. Bread is no longer on sale in the shops. . . . Sickness already is becoming rampant because of poor food and inadequate shelter. . . . Hundreds of children have died in the vicinity of the railway stations. . . . Everyone capable of bearing arms is being enrolled in forces defending the city. . . . There are not nearly enough arms to go around."

and similar workers, Mr. Roosevelt said, was "the job of getting "the people as a whole to realize certain facts."

The President on that occasion said that he and Mrs. Roosevelt receive an "amazing" number of letters from people everywhere in the United States "pleading to be told what they can do to help."

A WEEK AFTER this White House conference, Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, said that women were being "intolerably" discriminated against in the civilian defense program.

Total war has greatly increased the importance of women on the home front, a fact that has been eloquently illustrated in England. The truth is, however, that women always have been important in war. In the cynical postwar twenties, it was the fashion to scoff at the role of America's women in 1917-1918, to snicker at their knitting, their crusading and their militancy in general. That was the debunking age, when the long-haired literati were saying that Wall Street and the "munitions makers" dragged the United States into the World War.

Debunkers Discover Patriotism

A strange thing has happened since then. The pseudo intellectuals and debunkers have suddenly discovered the United States and "patriotism." Many of them now are demanding an all-out attack on Hitler, and cursing the "munitions makers" because they are not turning out the stuff fast enough. The boys who used to scoff at flag-waving now have become the most frenzied flag wavers of all.

As for the women who are bombarding the White House and "pleading" for something to do in the defense effort, they take their patriotism for granted. It is a part of them, and always has been. They are the same women, or the daughters of the women, who did their bit in 1917-1918. Many of them have sons, relatives or friends in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

It is supposed to be the task of OCD and the State and municipal defense councils to harness their energy and enthusiasm.

HERE IS A brief outline of what the OCD has accomplished. Reports from 46 States show that 2866 local councils of defense have been set up, and that 282 more are in the process of being formed.

One pamphlet, "Local Organization for Civilian Protection," has been printed and is in circulation. Three additional pamphlets dealing with air-raid protection are being printed. One pamphlet on emergency medical services is in print, and another on medical equipment is ready for publication. Work has been completed on a first-aid course and an advanced first-aid course, in cooperation with the American Red Cross. These two pamphlets will be produced by the Red Cross and will be ready soon. Other pamphlets are being prepared.

People Know Need Better Than Leaders

In cooperation with the War Department, a Fire School has been established at Edgewood Arsenal. Here firemen and policemen from different cities are trained in combating incendiary bombs, high explosives and poison gas.

An agreement has been reached with the American Red Cross, whereby the Red Cross agreed to train 100,000 volunteer nurses in the next 12 months.

THE OCD sent a special mission to England to study the effect of total war on the civilian population, and that mission has returned and submitted a preliminary report.

Notwithstanding all this, the OCD knows that its biggest job lies ahead. The people of the United States, it is admitted, have always been ahead of the Government in this matter of civilian defense, and, what is more, are still ahead of it.

That being so, it is fair to wonder whether a man already burdened with the job of running America's largest city will ever be able to catch up with them. Is there such a poverty of administrative talent among 132 million people that nobody can be found to give his full time to the job of commanding this new "front" in modern war?

Sub Incident Being Built Up, Nazis Say

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 5.—A German spokesman took the view today that the submarine attack on the United States destroyer Greer was just what advocates of American intervention in the war had been wanting.

"What interested us particularly," he said, "was the Reuters (British news agency) report that 'the long-awaited incident has occurred.'

"Elaboration on that remark is hardly necessary."

[Reuters said in a Washington dispatch that "it is felt this probably is only the first of an inevitable series of such incidents. One man declared it was high time there was an incident to get the United States in the war." These were the only sentences in the Reuters report as distributed in London which compared with the German quotation of Reuters.]

The spokesman insisted there was no reason to believe that the unidentified submarine which made the unsuccessful attack in the Atlantic was a German U-boat.

Asked whether the Reich had any information on the incident, he replied: "There have been a number of reports abroad, but none has been made to us."

Although there was a flurry of interest at the Wilhelmstrasse, more extensive comment was declined until more definite information could be obtained as to the time and place of the occurrence.

Russian Mission Charters Planes For Hop Eastward

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 5 (AP).—A Russian military mission, which arrived from Moscow yesterday, will rest here over the weekend.

Monday the 47 members will fly to Spokane in two chartered commercial planes, leaving behind the big flying boats in which they made the 8,000-mile trip from the Soviet capital.

No direct confirmation was possible of persistent reports that the airmen might learn to operate American military planes to open a polar ferry route to Russia.

One source disclosed they were expected to visit Fort George Wright at Spokane, then go on to Washington, D. C.

Duke of Kent's Plane Sinks Off Quebec

Quebec, Sept. 5 (AP).—An amphibian plane which had brought the Duke of Kent from the maritime provinces to Quebec sank today in the harbor, after the Duke had gone ashore. A big wave swamped it. It was believed no one was aboard.

The President's Day

By International News Service

GRIM MR. ROOSEVELT: Some 200 reporters filed eagerly into the President's office at 10:30 a. m. to see just how tough the Big Boss was going to be about the incident of the U. S. S. Greer, first American warship attacked in World War II. Thin-mouthed and grim, the President did not disappoint them. As soon as the Secret Service men ushered in the last correspondent, the door slammed; the President removed his cigarette holder from clenched teeth and began talking.

"ELIMINATE IT": The President's voice was low. There was no preliminary banter. Knotted bunches of muscles tightened at the squared ends of the President's jaw. The Big Boss was mad clear through. Asked what the United States Navy would do if it found the attacking submarine, the President snapped, "eliminate" it. His white shirt, monogrammed on the right sleeve in blue, darkened with sweat, and beads bubbled on the President's drawn-down upper lip and creased brow. The limp humidity of the office was no protection against the chill that chased along most spines. Having said all he had to say about the U. S. S. Greer attack by an enemy submarine, the President launched into a lengthy, equally acid-etched talk on national defense matters. All "off the record," and all noted in detail by German and Japanese correspondents.

CLOSE SECOND: Running second for color at the White House yesterday was the swearing-in of Francis Biddle as the fourth Attorney General of the Roosevelt Administration. He took the oath of fice under the President's benign eye and approving nod. Justice Robert H. Jackson, whom Biddle succeeds, swore his friend and associate in on the Bible that swore him from the sidelines to Attorney Generalship, to the Supreme Court. In the audience were such as Tommy Corcoran, Norwegian Minister de Morgenstierne, Justice Hugo Black, Mrs. Black, Ben Cohen, Senator Van Nuys of Indiana, and of course, the Biddle family.

THE MAN WHO, ETC.: Fat, fussy Alexander Woolcott, who came to the White House to stay while starring in "The Man Who Came to Dinner" and, according to White House staffers, was identical in the role on and offstage during the stay—came to the President's office. Stayed 15 minutes.

KNUDSEN, CABINET, sundries: Big Bill Knudsen swung in for another talk regarding the new defense production set-up. The cabinet arranged itself around the new Cabinet table for a brief meeting.

MOTHER: Though he talked several times long distance with her yesterday, the President continued to worry about his venerable mother. Last night he left with a special physician for Hyde Park and an anxiously awaited visit with his mother, Sara Delano Roosevelt, who has been at Campobello Island in Maine all summer, didn't stand the trip back to Hyde Park as well as expected. September 21, the elder Mrs. Roosevelt will celebrate her 87th birthday—surrounded by her family.

Rome Claims 22 British Planes

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Sept. 5.—Today's Italian war bulletin makes the striking claim that 22 British chasers were shot down in combat over Malta yesterday, while the Italian force only lost three. It is also claimed that two Blenheim bombers were shot down by antiaircraft defenses when they bombed Crotone, in Sicily. In all, the bulletins gave 53 enemy machines shot down in five days.

Nazis Repulsed By Leningrad, Russians Say

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Saturday), Sept. 6.—The Red army and people's battalions are counterattacking through a storm of artillery fire before Leningrad under Marshal Klementi Voroshilov's orders to save the city or die, Russian dispatches said today.

The early Saturday communique said fighting raged along the entire front. War dispatches reported pitched battles on the approaches of Leningrad, Kiev and Odessa, and claimed gradual destruction of a large German force which crossed to the east bank of the lower Dnieper River.

The Russians were reported to have thrown back the invaders almost a mile in the battle for Leningrad, retaking villages by charging through murderous barrages.

Isolated Nazis Battered

Red army tanks, planes and artillery were described as hammering to pieces a large German force which became stranded and isolated August 26 when it finally forced a crossing on the lower Dnieper where Marshal Simeon Budyenny has established a line on the east bank to defend the rest of the Ukraine. This battle was said to be continuing after the crushing of two German battalions.

Marshal Vorshilov's forces, strengthened by Red troops evacuated east after the fall of Tallinn in Estonia, claimed the recapture of four Soviet villages in the continuing series of spectacular charges against strong German positions near Leningrad.

It was, said Russian military dispatches, the second successive day in which the Leningrad defenders had taken the initiative.

Incomplete reports described the German losses as heavy: An artillery battalion, a heavy battery, 26 antitank guns, a mine-throwing battery and much other equipment.

Two of the four villages claimed to have fallen again into Soviet hands had been fortified by the Nazizs, said Russian accounts, and prepared as artillery bases.

Soviet big guns went into action to smash these heavier defenses, knocking out German mine throwers and an observation point equipped with a wireless station.

Big Red tanks, following up the barrage, then crushed and overran the Nazi machine gun positions in the villages of "K," "U" and "Z" and Soviet infantrymen charged in to clean out the last German resistance.

Russian advices pictured Kiev, the Ukrainian capital, and Odessa on the Black Sea as being steadily strengthened to hold on to the end.

At Odessa, where the Red army garrison is supported by sailors and a civilian population of half a million sworn to hold the city "to the last drop of blood," the Nazis' Rumanian allies were claimed to be falling by the thousands.

Kiev Swears Defiance

Kiev's people, said the Communist newspaper Pravda, took an oath to die rather than give up. Izvestia devoted an entire page to the people's resistance.

In the north, presumably about the Soviet Baltic naval base of Kronstadt, near Leningrad, it was claimed that 100 German planes had been shot down in making an unsuccessful attack.

Red bombers also struck at Berlin again over Thursday night, it was reported, setting off fires and explosions.

Two German-held airdromes west of Lake Ilmen, on the Leningrad front, were smashed by Soviet attacks, and 74 grounded German planes of the famous Richthofen squadron based there were destroyed, Soviet reports said.

Pravda published the first description of the evacuation of Tallinn which has appeared here. The Communist Party daily said sailors of the Baltic fleet conducted a stubborn rear-guard action for seven weeks, while their ships constantly shelled German columns.

When the retreat began after the Germans finally broke through to one of the central streets and shelled the harbor for four days, the Red air fleet fought a constant battle, it was said, to cover the withdrawal.

Navy Helps Odessa

Vice Admiral G. Zhukov wrote from Odessa that naval infantry was taking an active part in the defense of the city.

He said German commanders had promised their troops the city would fall by August 10, and when this failed to materialize they promised its surrender by September 1.

A special correspondent of Izvestia reported that he went to the Odessa naval base by sea and found stores, telephones, telegraph and the electric system all functioning.

But only narrow strips of pavement have been left for motor traffic, he said, because the rest of the cobblestones have been ripped up and made into barricades.

More than a million obstacles have been erected to bar the approaches to the city, he judged.

Soviet Troops Left Viipuri A Ghost City, Eyewitness Says

By Paul Sjoeblom

Foreign correspondents touring Viipuri at the invitation of the Finnish high command today found every building either damaged or demolished.

The streets are lined with the skeletons of houses through which the wind moans. The only moving things I saw were a few Finnish soldiers, a speeding army truck, huge rats diving into cellars, a shell-shocked dog which howled and ran away at the sight of me, and, finally, the Finnish war flag snapping like a whip atop a tower of ancient Viipuri castle.

The railroad square suffered most at the hansd of Soviet demolition squads. The station is a heap of rubbish. The railway tracks were either carried away or twisted out of shape.

All briges were demolished. The Finnish officers claimed that only a lightning attack which threatened the Soviet garrison with sudden encirclement prevented the enemy from blasting the entire city as utterly as the railroad square.

Cossacks Rout Nazis

Moscow (Saturday), Sept. 6 (U.P.)—Cossack cavalry is making deep raids into German territory and inflicting heavy losses with old-style saber charges on unsuspecting infantry units, the Soviet war report said today.

One group commanded by a Col. Dovator was credited with annihilating many German troops and smashing communications in a prolonged raid.

"In the very first engagement the Cossacks completely annihilated the Third Battalion of the 430th German Infantry Regiment," the communique said.

Then a German order for extermination of the Cossack detachment fell into Russian hands, the communique said. The Cossacks made their way through marshes and forests, fell upon the Germans, and in another engagement wiped out a second German battalion.

"Then they raided a German truck column and killed 136 German officers and men and destroyed 58 trucks, 3 motor cars and 3 fuel tanks," the communique reported.

Aid to Reds Speeded

Ankara, Sept. 5 (INS).—British fighter planes and bombers are expected to go into action soon in the Soviet-German conflict on the Eastern Battlefront, the Ankara radio stated tonight.

It was explained that while American aid to the Soviet is planned on a long-term basis Britain intends to send immediate help. The planes are to be flown into the Soviet Union via Iran.

Nelson Suggested As Defense Chief

"Some Very Good Men"

"If he is permitted to proceed with full backing, and moves in the right direction, he might furnish in himself the solution of the need for one-man control of defense under the President," Baruch added. "Above all, he must be supported in priorities if he and the work of the SPAB are to succeed. He intends, I am informed, to enlist some very good men to assist him."

After his talk with Nelson, Baruch went to Walter Reed Hospital for a chat with Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the A. E. F. Later he flew to New York with Undersecretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal.

There were other repercussions yesterday of Baruch's surprise interview at the White House. President Roosevelt told his press conference that some of the newspaper versions of Baruch's statement did not coincide with what had occurred between himself and Baruch.

"Colossal Task"

On Capitol Hill, Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, a persistent critic of slow defense progress, declared that Baruch's request should impel the President to commandeer "the ablest man in America for this gigantic job." Boards and commissions are proper for advice and the establishment of policy, Senator Byrd said, but "one man administration" is essential to efficiency.

"I have repeatedly emphasized the fact," said Byrd, "that the colossal task of coordinating the industrial activities of this country for the production of military equipment for ourselves and Great Britain is an executive job of the first magnitude. It can be accomplished successfully only by a one-man head, with full power to act."

Meanwhile, the Administration's campaign to render aid to small business and at the same time step up defense output moved forward as Floyd Odlum, of New York, director of the newly created OPM contract distribution division, declared that higher cost producers have their place in the present all-out effort."

This was regarded as a clear indication that he would take advantage of a recent change in Army-Navy contract regulations permitting a 15 per cent price advantage to bring defense work to small firms threatened with shutdowns, because of lack of materials for the manufacture of ordinary civilian products.

Tide Turning Against Nazis, Moscow Feels

By Alexander Werth
Reuters Special Correspondent

Moscow, Sept. 5.—There is a strong impression in Moscow tonight that events are taking a more favorable turn.

The defense of Leningrad, like that of Kiev and Odessa, has been organized with immense thoroughness.

The Germans in the Leningrad area are contending with enormous Russian forces against which they are obliged to send contstant reinforcements if their positions are to be maintained at all.

Risk Being Cut Off

The Germans realize a powerful counterattack in this Leningrad sector might place them in an extremely precarious position and that their troops risk being cut off by a double Russian thrust from Leningrad and from the south.

Hence the constant German concern to strengthen the Novogorod "wedge" southeast of Leningrad.

There is a growing belief that the Germans realize the capture of Leningrad is hopeless, especially in a reasonable time. They may attempt to by-pass it and divert their forces south from Leningrad toward the upper Volga and possibly to Moscow.

The risk of such a move, with Marshal Voroshilov's immense army around Leningrad ready for powerful sorties, need not be emphasized.

Smolensk Sector Stabilized

The central sector around Smolensk seems to be somewhat stabilized with the initiative remaining to the Russians. Here the Germans have adopted a defensive attitude.

The position east of Gomel is somewhat obscure but there is no reason to believe the German claim, or rather suggestion put out via a Finnish source, that they are progressing towards Bryansk, key town and rail junction about 220 miles southwest of Moscow.

There is reassuring news from various sides that the Germans have not succeeded in crossing the Dnieper River south of Kiev.

The German thrust towards the industrial centers of Kharkov and Rostov to reach the Caucasus railway system would be the most dangerous development. Despite the attempts to cross the Dnieper for that purpose such a thrust has not even started.

Movie Firms to Quit Business in Mexico

Mexico City, Sept. 5 (INS).—Eight American movie companies tonight notified Mexican distributors that exportation of films would stop after October 4. They said their decision was reached as the result of demands by Mexican workers who picketed the Mexico City offices of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Columbia Pictures with strike flags. The companies are MGM, Columbia, United Artists, Fox, Paramount, RKO, Universal and Warner Brothers. Seven thousand workers will be thrown out of jobs, it was estimated.

3 More Nazis, Pro-German Shot in Paris

By Ralph Heinzen
United Press Staff Writer

Vichy, Sept. 5 (U.P.).—Three more German army officers have been shot and wounded and a French pro-Nazi "collaborationist" assassinated in new outbreaks of terrorism in Paris and the occupied zone of France, it was revealed in dispatches reaching Vichy today.

The new shootings, bringing to four the number of attacks on German officers since Wednesday, threatened to touch off a wave of German reprisals in accordance with threats issued on August 23 by the German military commander in Paris, Lieut. Col. Ernst von Schaumburg.

The shootings, disorders and sabotage of railroads were said to be spreading over an increasingly wide region, due perhaps to the spark ignited by the attempted assassination in Versailles of Pierre Laval and Marcel Deat by a young anti-Nazi.

Marcel Gitton, 39-year-old former Communist deputy of the French Parliment who became an ardent Nazi "collaborationist" after the Russian-German pact of August 23, 1939, was shot and fatally wounded in an attack on a Paris street Thursday night.

Two Germans believed to be officers of the Army of occupation were said to have been shot mysteriously on Wednesday and Thursday—some reports said one of them may have died—at Lille, northern industrial city and scene of recent anti-Nazi disorders.

A third German officer was wounded in a Paris suburb, where a German army sergeant was shot and wounded Wednesday night while walking with his fiancee.

Courts Wage War on Unrest

Vichy, Unoccupied France, Sept. 5 (AP).—A military court at Dijon today sentenced a young mechanic to death for alleged Communist activity.

At Meknes, a woman was sent to prison for three months for criticism of Marshal Petain and "statements of a nature to agitate the population."

In a new drive against the black market in both the occupied and unoccupied zones the police seized tons of foods and arrested many persons for trafficking illegally in rationed food and clothing.

Figures at the same time were made public showing the growing seriousness of the food shortage in the Paris region, where meat supplies for August fell to less than half those of July.

At Marseilles 174 persons were arrested in connection with the counterfeiting and circulation of false bread tickets.

Legislators Blame Riots in Mexico On Fifth Column

Mexico City, Sept. 5 (AP).—A series of strikes and disorders, marked today by a riot in which hundreds of university students defied the police, brought an announcement tonight by Congressmen that they intended to ask the government for more energetic action against Fifth Columnists.

Deputy Cesar Garizurieta charged the strikes and disorders were the "first symptoms" of a campaign designed to create trouble for the government at a time when the Mexico-United States good neighbor policy is ripening into fruitful cooperation.

Today the students demanded that the date of their vacations be advanced and began shooting firecrackers and interfering with traffic in front of the Academy of Medicines.

Second Woman Seized as Spy Met Other at Bund Session

New York, Sept. 5.—Mrs. Pauline Mayer, 24, was arrested by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents today and held in $10,000 bail for hearing on suspicion of espionage for Germany.

FBI agents linked her with Lucy Boehmler, 18-year-old spy who pleaded guilty this week to charges of sending defense secrets to Germany.

Others in custody in connection with the same activities are Kurt Frederick Ludwig, held in Spokane, Wash., the alleged "master mind" of the group; Hans Pagel and Frederick Edward Schlosser, who pleaded guilty with Miss Boehmler, and Carl Herman Schroetter, arrested at Miami, Fla.

Federal authorities indicated that all six would be named together in a superseding indictment which the August grand jury will be asked to return.

United States Attorney Mathias F. Correa told the court that the activities of Mrs. Mayer, who lives here, had been similar to those of Miss Boehmler. He said she had been employed for six years by a dyeing firm. Federal sources said they had learned that the women had become acquainted at Bund meetings.

Arraigned before Federal Judge John Bright, Mrs. Mayer said she didn't know how to plead. She was held in bail for a hearing next Tuesday.

The six alleged spies now being held are accused of visiting Army camps, naval bases and defense factories and obtaining information which was sent to Germany.

Ludwig Admits Mailing Information

Spokane, Wash., Sept. 5 (AP).—U. S. Attorney Lyle D. Keith said today that Kurt Frederick Ludwig, charged with violation of the espionage laws and with conspiracy to violate the law, had admitted mailing to Europe vital information concerning the United States Army, airplane production and ship movements.

The 38-year-old German-American was ordered by Federal Judge Lewis Schwellenbach to be returned to New York to stand trial. His bond was continued at $50,000.

take in broad daylight at torpedo distance?"

If the submarine's periscope were above the surface, Mr. Roosevelt replied, there could be no excuse for failing to identify the Greer as an American ship.

He acknowledged that submarines sometimes aim their torpedoes at sounds registered by their listening devices, without rising to the surface, but indicated he would take a grave view of such an attack in waters where American ships are known to be operating.

The President mentioned Germany only once in the course of his discussion of the attack on the Greer, when he said that all submarines, including the German and Italian, have listening equipment which enables them to aim torpedoes without sighting their target through the periscope.

The A. P. story from Iceland quoted officers and crew members of the Greer as saying that British aircraft helped them ward off the U-boat attack.

Navy Department spokesmen here would not confirm or deny the account of the engagement given by Middleton.

President Roosevelt said the attack took place on the American side of the ocean. When asked if the encounter might also have taken place in the German-proclaimed blockade zone, which extends west of Iceland to within 3 miles of Greenland, the President said the United States did not recognize such a zone.

Everyone knows, he added, that a blockade has no meaning unless it is effective.

In discussing the countermeasures against the sub, the President made it plain that the fact that the Greer sustained no casualties or damage did not mean that the attack would be passed off lightly.

He told reporters he was reminded of a story of some children on their way to a country school who were fired upon by someone from bushes. The father of the children saw no reason even to search the bushes, the President said, because the children had not been hit.

The Administration does not sympathize with the father's attitude, the President continued, and has ordered a search of the bushes.

When asked what steps would be taken if the submarine were found, Mr. Roosevelt promptly replied that the Navy would try to "eliminate" the marauder. He gave reporters permission to quote him directly, adding that eliminate is a good word.

The President showed some impatience when a reporter asked if the engagement in the North Atlantic should be classified as shooting war. That was a hypothetical question, he said.

A Challenge to U. S., British Press Says

By the United Press

London (Saturday), Sept. 6.—Some British newspapers today interpreted the submarine attack on the U. S. S. Greer as the first direct challenge to the United States by Germany, and commented that the U-boat commander "provided the reminder that America needed that the war was near her shores."

sea approach to Leningrad.

A high command statement that Estonia had been mopped up indicated that German forces in the north were now free to devote their whole attention to Leningrad, the main objective. The Estonian islands of Dagoe and Oesel, where Russians were still holding out, presented a problem to German air and naval units.

In the middle sector facing Moscow, where the Russians have made strong counterattacks, DNB claimed that between August 25 and September 4 two German army corps took over 30,000 prisoners and captured or destroyed 160 tanks. The Russians were said to have lost more than 200 guns and several hundred vehicles of all types.

Vague dispatches from other sections of the Eastern Front reported that an army corps in the middle sector ha dtaken 17,300 prisoners and destroyed or captured 121 tanks, including 30 of the heaviest type.

Another army corps in the course of two weeks was credited with 13,700 prisoners, 26 tanks and 115 cannon.

Although the spokesman said he couldn't mention place names on the central sector he declared: "You may be sure the operations are very successful. For one thing, there have been extensive territorial gains not mentioned by the high command."

Finns Report Fires Raging

Helsinki, Sept. 5 (AP).—A Finnish communique said tonight that big fires, which could be seen from the Finnish border, were raging in Leningrad. The communique added:

"Traffic in the Leningrad area is in a state of confusion. A locomotive engineer who left Leningrad September 1 related that railway traffic had ceased then, all railways leading out of the city being either in enemy hands or so badly damaged they could not be repaired for traffic.

"It is becoming impossible to procure food. Bread is no longer on sale in the shops. . . . Sickness already is becoming rampant because of poor food and inadequate shelter. . . . Hundreds of children have died in the vicinity of the railway stations. . . . Everyone capable of bearing arms is being enrolled in forces defending the city. . . . There are not nearly enough arms to go around."

Civilian Defense Is Full-Time Job Run on Part-Time Basis

and similar workers, Mr. Roosevelt said, was 'the job of getting "the people as a whole to realize certain facts."

The President on that occasion said that he and Mrs. Roosevelt receive an "amazing" number of letters from people everywhere in the United States "pleading to be told what they can do to help."

A WEEK AFTER this White House conference, Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, said that women were being "intolerably" discriminated against in the civilian defense program.

Total war has greatly increased the importance of women on the home front, a fact that has been eloquently illustrated in England. The truth is, however, that women always have been important in war. In the cynical postwar twenties, it was the fashion to scoff at the role of America's women in 1917-1918, to snicker at their knitting, their crusading and their militancy in general. That was the debunking age, when the long-haired literati were saying that Wall Street and the "munitions makers" dragged the United States into the World War.

Debunkers Discover Patriotism

A strange thing has happened since then. The pseudo intellectuals and debunkers have suddenly discovered the United States and "patriotism." Many of them now are demanding an all-out attack on Hitler, and cursing the "munitions makers" because they are not turning out the stuff fast enough. The boys who used to scoff at flag-waving now have become the most frenzied flag wavers of all.

As for the women who are bombarding the White House and "pleading" for something to do in the defense effort, they take their patriotism for granted. It is a part of them, and always has been. They are the same women, or the daughters of the women, who did their bit in 1917-1918. Many of them have sons, relatives or friends in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

It is supposed to be the task of OCD and the State and municipal defense councils to harness their energy and enthusiasm.

HERE IS A brief outline of what the OCD has accomplished. Reports from 46 States show that 2866 local councils of defense have been set up, and that 282 more are in the process of being formed.

One pamphlet, "Local Organization for Civilian Protection," has been printed and is in circulation. Three additional pamphlets dealing with air-raid protection are being printed. One pamphlet on emergency medical services is in print, and another on medical equipment is ready for publication. Work has been completed on a first-aid course and an advanced first-aid course, in cooperation with the American Red Cross. These two pamphlets will be produced by the Red Cross and will be ready soon. Other pamphlets are being prepared.

People Know Need Better Than Leaders

In cooperation with the War Department, a Fire School has been established at Edgewood Arsenal. Here firemen and policemen from different cities are trained in combating incendiary bombs, high explosives and poison gas.

An agreement has been reached with the American Red Cross, whereby the Red Cross agreed to train 100,000 volunteer nurses in the next 12 months.

THE OCD sent a special mission to England to study the effect of total war on the civilian population, and that mission has returned and submitted a preliminary report.

Notwithstanding all this, the OCD knows that its biggest job lies ahead. The people of the United States, it is admitted, have always been ahead of the Government in this matter of civilian defense, and, what is more, are still ahead of it.

That being so, it is fair to wonder whether a man already burdened with the job of running America's largest city will ever be able to catch up with them. Is there such a poverty of administrative talent among 132 million people that nobody can be found to give his full time to the job of commanding this new "front" in modern war?

Senate Speeds Action on Court Merger

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Senate District Committee, moved yesterday to speed action on legislation to merge the District's Police and Municipal Courts, a step long advocated by leading jurists and members of the bar here.

The Senator acted by summoning an imposing list of judges and lawyers. The list included Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner and Justice Harold M. Stephens of the District Court of Appeals; Judge John P. McMahon, presiding police judge; Judge George C. Aukam, presiding judge of Municipal Court, and officials of the various bar associations.

Sub Incident Being Built Up, Nazis Say

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 5.—A German spokesman took the view today that the submarine attack on the United States destroyer Greer was just what advocates of American intervention in the war had been wanting.

"What interested us particularly," he said, "was the Reuters (British news agency) report that 'the long-awaited incident has occurred.'

"Elaboration on that remark is hardly necessary."

[Reuters said in a Washington dispatch that "it is felt this probably is only the first of an inevitable series of such incidents. One man declared it was high time there was an incident to get the United States in the war." These were the only sentences in the Reuters report as distributed in London which compared with the German quotation of Reuters.]

The spokesman insisted there was no reason to believe that the unidentified submarine which made the unsuccessful attack in the Atlantic was a German U-boat.

Asked whether the Reich had any information on the incident, he replied: "There have been a number of reports abroad, but none has been made to us."

Although there was a flurry of interest at the Wilhelmstrasse, more extensive comment was declined until more definite information could be obtained as to the time and place of the occurrence.

Russian Mission Charters Planes For Hop Eastward

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 5 (AP).—A Russian military mission, which arrived from Moscow yesterday, will rest here over the weekend.

Monday the 47 members will fly to Spokane in two chartered commercial planes, leaving behind the big flying boats in which they made the 8,000-mile trip from the Soviet capital.

No direct confirmation was possible of persistent reports that the airmen might learn to operate American military planes to open a polar ferry route to Russia.

One source disclosed they were expected to visit Fort George Wright at Spokane, then go on to Washington, D. C.

Duke of Kent's Plane Sinks Off Quebec

Quebec, Sept. 5 (AP).—An amphibian plane which had brought the Duke of Kent from the maritime provinces to Quebec sank today in the harbor, after the Duke had gone ashore. A big wave swamped it. It was believed no one was aboard.

The President's Day

By International News Service

GRIM MR. ROOSEVELT: Some 200 reporters filed eagerly into the President's office at 10:30 a. m. to see just how tough the Big Boss was going to be about the incident of the U. S. S. Greer, first American warship attacked in World War II. Thin-mouthed and grim, the President did not disappoint them. As soon as the Secret Service men ushered in the last correspondent, the door slammed; the President removed his cigarette holder from clenched teeth and began talking.

"ELIMINATE IT": The President's voice was low. There was no preliminary banter. Knotted bunches of muscles tightened at the squared ends of the President's jaw. The Big Boss was mad clear through. Asked what the United States Navy would do if it found the attacking submarine, the President snapped, "eliminate" it. His white shirt, monogrammed on the right sleeve in blue, darkened with sweat, and beads bubbled on the President's drawn-down upper lip and creased brow. The limp humidity of the office was no protection against the chill that chased along most spines. Having said all he had to say about the U. S. S. Greer attack by an enemy submarine, the President launched into a lengthy, equally acid-etched talk on national defense matters. All "off the record," and all noted in detail by German and Japanese correspondents.

CLOSE SECOND: Running second for color at the White House yesterday was the swearing-in of Francis Biddle as the fourth Attorney General of the Roosevelt Administration. He took the oath of fice under the President's benign eye and approving nod. Justice Robert H. Jackson, whom Biddle succeeds, swore his friend and associate in on the Bible that swore him from the sidelines to Attorney Generalship, to the Supreme Court. In the audience were such as Tommy Corcoran, Norwegian Minister de Morgenstierne, Justice Hugo Black, Mrs. Black, Ben Cohen, Senator Van Nuys of Indiana, and of course, the Biddle family.

THE MAN WHO, ETC.: Fat, fussy Alexander Woolcott, who came to the White House to stay while starring in "The Man Who Came to Dinner" and, according to White House staffers, was identical in the role on and offstage during the stay—came to the President's office. Stayed 15 minutes.

KNUDSEN, CABINET, sundries: Big Bill Knudsen swung in for another talk regarding the new defense production set-up. The cabinet arranged itself around the new Cabinet table for a brief meeting.

MOTHER: Though he talked several times long distance with her yesterday, the President continued to worry about his venerable mother. Last night he left with a special physician for Hyde Park and an anxiously awaited visit with his mother, Sara Delano Roosevelt, who has been at Campobello Island in Maine all summer, didn't stand the trip back to Hyde Park as well as expected. September 21, the elder Mrs. Roosevelt will celebrate her 87th birthday—surrounded by her family.

Rome Claims 22 British Planes

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Sept. 5.—Today's Italian war bulletin makes the striking claim that 22 British chasers were shot down in combat over Malta yesterday, while the Italian force only lost three. It is also claimed that two Blenheim bombers were shot down by antiaircraft defenses when they bombed Crotone, in Sicily. In all, the bulletins gave 52 enemy machines shot down in five days.

Nazis Repulsed By Leningrad, Russians Say

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Saturday), Sept. 6.—The Red army and people's battalions are counterattacking through a storm of artillery fire before Leningrad under Marshal Klementi Voroshilov's orders to save the city or die, Russian dispatches said today.

The early Saturday communique said fighting raged along the entire front. War dispatches reported pitched battles on the approaches of Leningrad, Kiev and Odessa, and claimed gradual destruction of a large German force which crossed to the east bank of the lower Dnieper River.

The Russians were reported to have thrown back the invaders almost a mile in the battle for Leningrad, retaking villages by charging through murderous barrages.

Isolated Nazis Battered

Red army tanks, planes and artillery were described as hammering to pieces a large German force which became stranded and isolated August 26 when it finally forced a crossing on the lower Dnieper where Marshal Simeon Budyenny has established a line on the east bank to defend the rest of the Ukraine. This battle was said to be continuing after the crushing of two German battalions.

Marshal Vorshilov's forces, strengthened by Red troops evacuated east after the fall of Tallinn in Estonia, claimed the recapture of four Soviet villages in the continuing series of spectacular charges against strong German positions near Leningrad.

It was said Russian military dispatches, the second successive day in which the Leningrad defenders had taken the initiative.

Incomplete reports described the German losses as heavy: An artillery battalion, a heavy battery, 26 antitank guns, a mine-throwing battery and much other equipment.

Two of the four villages claimed to have fallen again into Soviet hands had been fortified by the Nazizs, said Russian accounts, and prepared as artillery bases.

Soviet big guns went into action to smash these heavier defenses, knocking out German mine throwers and an observation point equipped with a wireless station.

Big Red tanks, following up the barrage, then crushed and overran the Nazi machine gun positions in the villages of "K," "U" and "Z" and Soviet infantrymen charged in to clean out the last German resistance.

Russian advices pictured Kiev, the Ukrainian capital, and Odessa on the Black Sea as being steadily strengthened to hold on to the end.

At Odessa, where the Red army garrison is supported by sailors and a civilian population of half a million sworn to hold the city "to the last drop of blood," the Nazis' Rumanian allies were claimed to be falling by the thousands.

Kiev Swears Defiance

Kiev's people, said the Communist newspaper Pravda, took an oath to die rather than give up. Izvestia devoted an entire page to the people's resistance.

In the north, presumably about the Soviet Baltic naval base of Kronstadt, near Leningrad, it was claimed that 100 German planes had been shot down in making an unsuccessful attack.

Red bombers also struck at Berlin again over Thursday night, it was reported, setting off fires and explosions.

Two German-held airdromes west of Lake Ilmen, on the Leningrad front, were smashed by Soviet attacks, and 74 grounded German planes of the famous Richthofen squadron based there were destroyed, Soviet reports said.

Pravda published the first description of the evacuation of Tallinn which has appeared here. The Communist Party daily said sailors of the Baltic fleet conducted a stubborn rear-guard action for seven weeks, while their ships constantly shelled German columns.

When the retreat began after the Germans finally broke through to one of the central streets and shelled the harbor for four days, the Red air fleet fought a constant battle, it was said, to cover the withdrawal.

Navy Helps Odessa

Vice Admiral G. Zhukov wrote from Odessa that naval infantry was taking an active part in the defense of the city.

He said German commanders had promised their troops the city would fall by August 10, and when this failed to materialize they promised its surrender by September 1.

A special correspondent of Izvestia reported that he went to the Odessa naval base by sea and found stores, telephones, telegraph and the electric system all functioning.

But only narrow strips of pavement have been left for motor traffic, he said, because the rest of the cobblestones have been ripped up and made into barricades.

More than a million obstacles have been erected to bar the approaches to the city, he judged.

Soviet Troops Left Viipuri A Ghost City, Eyewitness Says

Foreign correspondents touring Viipuri at the invitation of the Finnish high command today found every building either damaged or demolished.

The streets are lined with the skeletons of houses through which the wind moans. The only moving things I saw were a few Finnish soldiers, a speeding army truck, huge rats diving into cellars, a shell-shocked dog which howled, and ran away at the sight of me, and, finally, the Finnish war flag snapping like a whip atop a tower of ancient Viipuri castle.

The railroad square suffered most at the hansd of Soviet demolition squads. The station is a heap of rubbish. The railway tracks were either carried away or twisted out of shape.

All briges were demolished. The Finnish officers claimed that only a lightning attack which threatened the Soviet garrison with sudden encirclement prevented the enemy from blasting the entire city as utterly as the railroad square.

Cossacks Rout Nazis

Moscow (Saturday), Sept. 6 (U.P.)—Cossack cavalry is making deep raids into German territory and inflicting heavy losses with old-style saber charges on unsuspecting infantry units, the Soviet war report said today.

One group commanded by a Col. Dovator was credited with annihilating many German troops and smashing communications in a prolonged raid.

"In the very first engagement the Cossacks completely annihilated the Third Battalion of the 430th German Infantry Regiment," the communique said.

Then a German order for extermination of the Cossack detachment fell into Russian hands, the communique said. The Cossacks made their way through marshes and forests, fell upon the Germans, and in another engagement wiped out a second German battalion.

"Then they raided a German truck column and killed 138 German officers and men and destroyed 58 trucks, 3 motor cars and 3 fuel tanks," the communique reported.

Aid to Reds Speeded

Ankara, Sept. 5 (INS).—British fighter planes and bombers are expected to go into action soon in the Soviet-German conflict on the Eastern Battlefront, the Ankara radio stated tonight.

It was explained that while American aid to the Soviet is planned on a long-term basis Britain intends to send immediate help. The planes are to be flown into the Soviet Union via Iran.

Nelson Suggested As Defense Chief

"Some Very Good Men"

"If he is permitted to proceed with full backing, and moves in the right direction, he might furnish in himself the solution of the need for one-man control of defense under the President," Baruch added. "Above all, he must be supported in priorities if he and the work of the SPAB are to succeed. He intends, I am informed, to enlist some very good men to assist him."

After his talk with Nelson, Baruch went to Walter Reed Hospital for a chat with Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the A. E. F. Later he flew to New York with Undersecretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal.

There were other repercussions yesterday of Baruch's surprise interview at the White House. President Roosevelt told his press conference that some of the newspaper versions of Baruch's statement did not coincide with what had occurred between himself and Baruch.

"Colossal Task"

On Capitol Hill, Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, a persistent critic of slow defense progress, declared that Baruch's request should impel the President to commandeer "the ablest man in America for this gigantic job." Boards and commissions are proper for advice and the establishment of policy, Senator Byrd said, but "one man administration" is essential to efficiency.

"I have repeatedly emphasized the fact," said Byrd, "that the colossal task of coordinating the industrial activities of this country for the production of military equipment for ourselves and Great Britain is an executive job of the first magnitude. It can be accomplished successfully only by a one-man head, with full power to act."

Meanwhile, the Administration's campaign to render aid to small business and at the same time step up defense output moved forward as Floyd Odlum, of New York, director of the newly created OPM contract distribution division, declared that higher cost producers have their place in the present all-out effort."

This was regarded as a clear indication that he would take advantage of a recent change in Army-Navy contract regulations permitting a 15 per cent price advantage to bring defense work to small firms threatened with shutdowns, because of lack of materials for the manufacture of ordinary civilian products.

Tide Turning Against Nazis, Moscow Feels

By Alexander Werth
Reuters Special Correspondent

Moscow, Sept. 5.—There is a strong impression in Moscow tonight that events are taking a more favorable turn.

The defense of Leningrad, like that of Kiev and Odessa, has been organized with immense thoroughness.

The Germans in the Leningrad area are contending with enormous Russian forces against which they are obliged to send contstant reinforcements if their positions are to be maintained at all.

Risk Being Cut Off

The Germans realize a powerful counterattack in this Leningrad sector might place them in an extremely precarious position and that their troops risk being cut off by a double Russian thrust from Leningrad and from the south.

Hence the constant German concern to strengthen the Novogorod "wedge" southeast of Leningrad.

There is a growing belief that the Germans realize the capture of Leningrad is hopeless, especially in a reasonable time. They may attempt to by-pass it and divert their forces south from Leningrad toward the upper Volga and possibly to Moscow.

The risk of such a move, with Marshal Voroshilov's immense army around Leningrad ready for powerful sorties, need not be emphasized.

Smolensk Sector Stabilized

The central sector around Smolensk seems to be somewhat stabilized with the initiative remaining to the Russians. Here the Germans have adopted a defensive attitude.

The position east of Gomel is somewhat obscure but there is no reason to believe the German claim, or rather suggestion put out via a Finnish source, that they are progressing towards Bryansk, key town and rail junction about 220 miles southwest of Moscow.

There is reassuring news from various sides that the Germans have not succeeded in crossing the Dnieper River south of Kiev.

The German thrust towards the industrial centers of Kharkov and Rostov to reach the Caucasus railway system would be the most dangerous development. Despite the attempts to cross the Dnieper for that purpose such a thrust has not even started.

Movie Firms to Quit Business in Mexico

Mexico City, Sept. 5 (INS).—Eight American movie companies tonight notified Mexican distributors that exportation of films would stop after October 4. They said their decision was reached as the result of demands by Mexican workers who picketed the Mexico City offices of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Columbia Pictures with strike flags. The companies are MGM, Columbia, United Artists, Fox, Paramount, RKO, Universal and Warner Brothers. Seven thousand workers will be thrown out of jobs, it was estimated.

3 More Nazis, Pro-German Shot in Paris

By Ralph Heinzen
United Press Staff Writer

Vichy, Sept. 5 (U.P.).—Three more German army officers have been shot and wounded and a French pro-Nazi "collaborationist" assassinated in new outbreaks of terrorism in Paris and the occupied zone of France, it was revealed in dispatches reaching Vichy today.

The new shootings, bringing to four the number of attacks on German officers since Wednesday, threatened to touch off a wave of German reprisals in accordance with threats issued on August 23 by the German military commander in Paris, Lieut. Col. Ernst von Schaumburg.

The shootings, disorders and sabotage of railroads were said to be spreading over an increasingly wide region, due perhaps to the spark ignited by the attempted assassination in Versailles of Pierre Laval and Marcel Deat by a young anti-Nazi.

Marcel Gitton, 39-year-old former Communist deputy of the French Parliment who became an ardent Nazi "collaborationist" after the Russian-German pact of August 23, 1939, was shot and fatally wounded in an attack on a Paris street Thursday night.

Two Germans believed to be officers of the Army of occupation were said to have been shot mysteriously on Wednesday and Thursday—some reports said one of them may have died—at Lille, northern industrial city and scene of recent anti-Nazi disorders.

A third German officer was wounded in a Paris suburb, where a German army sergeant was shot and wounded Wednesday night while walking with his fiancee.

Courts Wage War on Unrest

Vichy, Unoccupied France, Sept. 5 (AP).—A military court at Dijon today sentenced a young mechanic to death for alleged Communist activity.

At Meknes, a woman was sent to prison for three months for criticism of Marshal Petain and "statements of a nature to agitate the population."

In a new drive against the black market in both the occupied and unoccupied zones the police seized tons of foods and arrested many persons for trafficking illegally in rationed food and clothing.

Figures at the same time were made public showing the growing seriousness of the food shortage in the Paris region, where meat supplies for August fell to less than half those of July.

At Marseilles 174 persons were arrested in connection with the counterfeiting and circulation of false bread tickets.

Legislators Blame Riots in Mexico On Fifth Column

Mexico City, Sept. 5 (AP).—A series of strikes and disorders, marked today by a riot in which hundreds of university students defied the police, brought an announcement tonight by Congressmen that they intended to ask the government for more energetic action against Fifth Columnists.

Deputy Cesar Garizurieta charged the strikes and disorders were the "first symptoms" of a campaign designed to create trouble for the government at a time when the Mexico-United States good neighbor policy is ripening into fruitful cooperation.

Today the students demanded that the date of their vacations be advanced and began shooting firecrackers and interfering with traffic in front of the Academy of Medicines.

Second Woman Seized as Spy Met Other at Bund Session

New York, Sept. 5.—Mrs. Pauline Mayer, 24, was arrested by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents today and held in $10,000 bail for hearing on suspicion of espionage for Germany.

FBI agents linked her with Lucy Boehmler, 18-year-old spy who pleaded guilty this week to charges of sending defense secrets to Germany.

Others in custody in connection with the same activities are Kurt Frederick Ludwig, held in Spokane, Wash., the alleged "master mind" of the group; Hans Pagel and Frederick Edward Schlosser, who pleaded guilty with Miss Boehmler, and Carl Herman Schroetter, arrested at Miami, Fla.

Federal authorities indicated that all six would be named together in a superseding indictment which the August grand jury will be asked to return.

United States Attorney Mathias F. Correa told the court that the activities of Mrs. Mayer, who lives here, had been similar to those of Miss Boehmler. He said she had been employed for six years by a dyeing firm. Federal sources said they had learned that the women had become acquainted at Bund meetings.

Arraigned before Federal Judge John Bright, Mrs. Mayer said she didn't know how to plead. She was held in bail for a hearing next Tuesday.

The six alleged spies now being held are accused of visiting Army camps, naval bases and defense factories and obtaining information which was sent to Germany.

Ludwig Admits Mailing Information

Spokane, Wash., Sept. 5 (AP).—U. S. Attorney Lyle D. Keith said today that Kurt Frederick Ludwig, charged with violation of the espionage laws and with conspiracy to violate the law, had admitted mailing to Europe vital information concerning the United States Army, airplane production and ship movements.

The 38-year-old German-American was ordered by Federal Judge Lewis Schwellenbach to be returned to New York to stand trial. His bond was continued at $50,000.

"GOD BE WITH YOU TILL WE MEET AGAIN"
• • • JEREMIAH E. RANKIN • • •

God be with you till we meet again,
By His counsels guide, uphold you;
With His sheep securely fold you;
God be with you till we meet again.
Till we meet, till we meet,
Till we meet at Jesus' feet;
Till we meet, till we meet,
God be with you till we meet again.

This familiar lyric of benediction is a farewell with a spiritual thrill in it—subdued with the sadness of a goodbye—yet breaking into an uplift of bright hope. It has been translated into many languages and is a favorite Christian Endeavor hymn throughout the world.

Second Tanker Arrives at Vladivostok

A second American oil tanker arrived yesterday at Vladivostok, as Secretary of State Hull indicated that little progress had been made in negotiations with Japan on American war aid to Soviet Russia and other issues contributing to the present tension in the Pacific.

The tanker was the L. P. St. Clair, property of the Tidewater Associated Oil Co., loaded with 93,000 barrels of aviation gasoline.

Secretary Hull treated press conference questions on Japanese-American relations with his usual reserve, but dropped several hints that the conversations with Tokyo have not as yet proved particularly fruitful.

When he was told by a reporter that "some of us are wondering what has happened to the negotiations with Japan," the Secretary replied that he was wondering, too.

Reply Expected "In Due Course"

He said that a reply to the personal letter from Prince Konoye, Japanese premier, to President Roosevelt, received more than a week ago, would be sent along in due course.

Asked whether a continuation of the Tokyo-Washington conversations was awaiting dispatch of the American reply to Prince Konoye, Hull told reporters they would have to consult both sides.

Was the United States waiting for some further communication from Japan? That depended on the point of view, the Secretary said.

Questioned on the possibility of lend-lease aid to the Free French forces, Hull said the United States is on the most friendly terms with Charles de Gaulle's movement, trading back and forth with the Free French in as normal a way as the present abnormal conditions allow.

As far as war materials are concerned, he said the Free French get most of their equipment from Britain and indicated that American lend-least goods may possibly reach Gen. de Gaulle by this route.

(The lend-lease law provides that equipment sent to one foreign country cannot be transferred to another without President Roosevelt's consent.)

Meanwhile, the State Department said it has not yet received any protest from the Vichy government against American newspaper articles charging that Gaston Henry-Haye, French Ambassador here, and members of his staff are serving Nazi interests in America. The Ambassador has no appointment scheduled with Secretary Hull, it was said.

Press dispatches from Vichy reported yesterday that the French government will lodge a formal protest with the State Department.

The charges against the French Embassy staff here, according to a New York Times dispatch, "created a painful impression" in Vichy.

Japan Rushes Toward Full War Footing

Tokyo (Saturday), Sept. 6 (U.P.)—Japan today rushed ahead with a plan to put all the Empire's transportation and communications systems on a full war footing, as the foreign office announced that new representations have been sent to both Washington and Moscow against shipping American oil to Siberia via the Japanese Straits.

Concern also is felt, said Iichi Kishi, spokesman for the government, over delivery of American war supplies to the Soviets by way of Manila.

According to the newspaper Yomiuri, five Russian freighters are standing by in Shanghai to fetch supplies from Manila. Commenting on this report, Kishi pointed out that ships would pass close by Japanese territorial waters.

Recent strong Japanese press articles condemning possible use of an Alaskan air route between America and Russia, said the spokesman, "express the view of the Japanese government."

3 Italian Craft Sunk; Cruiser, Troopship Hit

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 5.—Seven Axis ships, including two warships and a big Italian liner which may have been carrying troops to North Africa, have been sunk or damaged in a series of British successes in the Mediterranean, the admiralty announced today.

The liner was torpedoed "and almost certainly sunk," the admiralty said, while in the other attacks, apparently in the last few days, three ships were declared to have been sunk and three more damaged, two severely.

One of the damaged vessels was reported to be a 10,000-ton cruiser.

The big liner was believed to be the 23,635-ton Duilio, the admiralty said, adding: "The Italian liners of this type are known to have been acting as troop transports."

Tanker, Destroyer Wrecked

Communiques reported these other actions:

Loaded southbound tanker torpedoed and sunk from Axis convoy off Sicily.

Supply ship of "about 8000 tons" torpedoed and sunk by submarine in central Mediterranean.

Axis destroyer torpedoed and "destroyed" by planes of the R. A. F. Middle East command outside of Tripoli Harbor on the night of September 3-4.

Ten thousand ton Axis cruiser hit by torpedoes and seriously damaged in attack on "an enemy naval force"—presumably Italian—near straits of Messina between Sicily and the Italian "toe."

The 4,971-ton Italian supply ship Aquitania torpedoed and severely damaged in the convoy action off Sicily.

Large merchant ship hit by torpedo-carrying R. A. F. planes in Tripoli attack.

Poor Gigolette! Heart's Busted, So Is Business

Los Angeles, Sept. 5.—There is a big, broken heart in the center of Dolores Gunn's window display.

Dolores says that represents her heart, broken when she was denied permission to continue her escort bureau.

But, symbolism or no, Dolores' landlady, Mary Chambers, says the lease prohibits it.

So the landlady brought suit in municipal court to make Dolores take the window display out of the building where Dolores lives.

Dolores, explaining the display to the court, said it included:

"A figure of myself and a copy of the escort bureau ordinance that I was instrumental in getting passed.

"A picket fence with two dolls gossiping over it, signifying the poison tongues whose reports to vice squad officers caused my arrest."

War Games Prove Soldier Slang to Be a Weapon for Secrecy

By the Associated Press

Fort Lewis, Wash., Sept. 5.—The slang of the American doughboy today is replacing code language formerly used by the Army for sending military messages by radio or telephone while in the field.

The jargon of the average private would fool any foreign espionage agent, Army intelligence officers asserted. There is no system or plan behind the word and sentence construction.

Slang talk over a field telephone—whose wires might run for 30 miles from a battlefield to corps headquarters—would be unintelligible to foreign agents tapping the wire.

"Unless it was one of our own citizens trying to get information from us, the American slang would just be a headache to the foreign agent," said Lieut. Col. Raymond C. Lehman, intelligence officer of the Ninth Army Corps. "What's more, while trying to figure out what we had said, the order would be carried out and completed."

Colonel Lehman said the Army had dignified the military slang message as "modern criptography." Its value was proved in the recent Pacific Northwest war maneuvers.

During the thick of battle it was necessary to get a vital message back to Maj. O. Joyce, Ninth Corps Commander.

Maj. Jerry Michel, assistant chief of staff, Third Division, called Lieut. Col. Walter Lauer, Third Division chief of staff, on the radio telephone. The message follows:

"Walter—This is Jerry! You know where we are. John is in a hell of a shape. That little guy just arrived but he is going to quit playing marbles and start playing mumble-de-peg. He will go in all directions so that John will be able to go his way. John is not going to wait until the mystic hour but is going to get his belly wet. Tell the gent in the mustard-colored shirt."

A few minutes later, many miles on another battle front, Gen. Joyce ("the gent in the mustard-colored shirt") received the following translation:

"To the Commanding General, Ninth Army Corps:

"The Fifteenth Infantry has been held up by hostile fire and a destroyed bridge. The Thirtieth Infantry has just arrived in motors and is preparing to attack the resistance from all sides. The Fifteenth Infantry, upon the reduction of hostile resistance, will continue on its original mission by fording the stream with entire force. Time to repair the bridge is four hours."

Wreckers Begin on Dodge's Castle

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 5.—John F. Dodge's castle, which cost nearly $3,000,000 but hardly knew the warmth of family life, started toward oblivion today.

Wreckers received a permit to tear down the fabulous building which the multi-millionaire automobile manufacturer had intended would rival the home of any of the world's wealthiest princes.

The great house on Lake Shore Drive, with 110 rooms and 24 baths, was still uncompleted when Dodge died in 1920, and the family left it untenanted, none to admire its marble interior trim and lavish adornments which Dodge had scoured the world to obtain.

He even brought 110 stonecutters from Scotland to help build the house because of their work on Andrew Carnegie's Skibo.

As years passed, the underbrush grew and the huge structure, which contained an acre of floor space gradually became hidden from passersby. Small children, when they could elude watchmen, liked to peer through the windows for a "ghost."

The castle contained a swimming pool and ballroom in the basement, on the main floor was a reception room in which could be erected a modern bungalow.

Marriage Made 'Snookie' a 'Dope,' Bride, 16, Says

Los Angeles, Sept. 5.—Before their wedding, Mrs. Esther Thalhammer charged in a suit for divorce today, her 60-year-old husband called her "buttercup," "monkey doodle," "snookie" and "baby," but after their wedding he called her a "dope" and a "stupid fool."

The 16-year-old bride also charged that her husband even tried to persuade her to pose nude for photographs so he could show them to his friends.

The bridegroom, Karl W. Thalhammer, wealthy manufacturer of camera equipment, filed suit on August 19 for annulment. Mrs. Thalhammer filed a cross-complaint asking for a divorce and $1,000 a month alimony.

Thalhammer said the bride's father, John M. Schleisser, a taxidermist, "falsely and unjustly" accused him of having seduced her.

Senate Passes 3½ Billion Tax Measure

lowering of exemptions of mutual insurance companies. Sales tax exponents as well will launch a new drive.

Two major disputes, threatening extension of debate deep into next week, were cleared from the floor in the early afternoon to hurry the pending bill on its way. Besides the community property section, a pension fight was laid aside when Senator Downey (Democrat), of California, agreed to postpone his plea for $30 monthly payments to all persons over 60.

Auto Tax Stands

The push for passage followed, but leaders had to cut their way through two other strong bids for revision before the final vote came at 5:30 p. m.

An effort to knock out the $5 use tax on automobiles by Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, and Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, failed, 35 to 32.

A farm bloc move to increase import taxes on foreign fats and oils was rejected by a vote of 31 to 32. An effort to reconsider this vote failed, 30 to 32.

Landslide passage of the bill tallied 51 Democrats and 16 Republicans supporting it against 2 Democrats, 2 Republicans and 1 Progressive voting "no."

La Follette Won't Confer

The dissenters were Senators Clark of Idaho and McCarran of Nevada (Democrats), Langer and Nye of North Dakota (Republicans), and La Follette of Wisconsin (Progressive).

Due to his opposition to the program in its entirety, La Follette served notice he could not serve on the conference committee.

The big bill will collect $1,197,200,000, or one-third of its revenue, from incisive changes in the individual income tax structure. Surtaxes would start at 6 per cent (10 per cent with the 4 per cent normal tax included), on the first dollar of taxable income. They would range upward to 77 per cent (81 per cent with the normal tax), on the highest tax bracket.

Base broadening, starting taxes after $750 exemptions for single and $1500 for married persons, corraled an estimated 4,911,000 new tax returns. The 10 per cent special defense tax was absorbed in the individual surtax and the corporate normal tax.

A 6 per cent surtax is imposed on corporate net income up to $25,000, and 7 per cent on income in excess of that.

Profits Tax Boosted

Excess profits tax rates were boosted 10 percentage points in each rate bracket but corporations were allowed to retain the option of determining excess profits on the basis of either invested capital or average earnings.

Deduction of corporate income taxes was disallowed in computing excess profits taxes, but the latter were allowed as a deduction in computing both the corporate normal and surtax. The House shifted these credits as a revenue-producer and the Senate concurred.

New and increased excise taxes would run the gamut from a $4 a gallon tax on distilled liquor and a 7 per cent tax on automobiles, to a 10 per cent tax on electric bulbs, numerous other household articles, sporting goods and "luxuries."

After yielding on community property and admissions tax issues, Chairman George served notice he would fight to the last further revenue losers. Taking the floor in support of the $5 use tax on automobiles, which La Follette called "the most repressive tax in the bill," George said:

"If this proposal is defeated I pledge you my word I will stand on this floor and offer tax after tax to see whether this chamber is willing to meet the acid test of defraying appropriations for defense."

Jewelry Excise Transferred

Senator Brooks (Republican), of Illinois, later moved to cut the proposed 10 per cent tax on telephone bills to the 5 per cent House rate, but failed on a voice vote.

As the bill neared conference Senator George sent several technical changes to conference, and minor revisions by a few other Senators were accepted.

On motion of Senator Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, the proposed excise tax on jewelry was transferred from the retailer to the manufacturer and the rate changed from 10 per cent to 15 per cent.

The Senate accepted an amendment by Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, to impose no additional tax on industrial alcohol used in medicine or food products.

An amendment by Senator Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, exempted from the admissions tax entertainments by public or parochial schools. Another by Senator Brown (Democrat), of exempted entertainments by religious institutions from the same tax.

CEREMONY IN PRESIDENT'S OFFICE—Francis Biddle took the oath of office as Attorney General of the United States yesterday at a ceremony in the White House a few hours after his appointment was confirmed by the Senate. Committee Named On Milk for Needy

Steck said that the schools themselves, in order to qualify for penny milk, must guarantee a 270 per cent increase in consumption. Previously, it was understood that if boys' clubs, settlement houses and other philanthropic agencies joined the program the consumption increase thus effected would be credited to the program as a unit and thereby make it easier for the schools to become eligible.

A 270 per cent rise is impossible in the 39 low income area schools which have been proposed to the Surplus Marketing Administration, since 6000 of the 15,000 pupils enrolled last year were milk drinkers. Accordingly, the Board of Education is faced with the task of selecting a smaller list of schools in which the fewest pupils, proportionately, are provided with milk under the WPA school lunch or P.-T. A. nutrition programs.

"The Lowest Third"

One SMA requirement is that 65 per cent of the youngsters attending a school, club or other participating institution must, themselves or their families, be on public relief, private charity or WPA, or else be in the "lowest third" income class.

Steck was reluctant to define the "lowest third." Pressed by Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, maternal and child welfare director of the Health Department, for an explanation, Steck ventured "about $1000 a year."

"For any sized family?" Dr. Oppenheimer wanted to know.

"For any sized family," Steck replied.

Dr. Oppenheimer laughed when the SMA aide said the size of the family would make no difference. In other words, a child in a family of three, with an income of $1000 a year would be entitled to a penny half-pints at school, but the milk would be denied a youngster who came from a family of 11 which had an annual income of $1100.

Miss Moore Discouraged

Steck's "clarification" of the requirements left members of the committee more confused than ever, several of them said after the meeting. Nevertheless, they are determindly going ahead with the job of hurdling any and all obstacles the Surplus Marketing Administration sets up.

"I came away with the impression there isn't much chance of our boys participating in the penny milk program," said Miss Dorris Moore, who represented the Metropolitan Police Boys' Clubs.

Regulations approved on August 14 by Secretary of Agriculture Wickard specifically include boys' clubs as possible beneficiaries, however.

Senate Tax Bill Highlights

Highlights of the $3,580,900,000 National defense tax bill passed yesterday by the Senate:

Lowers individual income tax exemptions to $750 for single persons and $1500 for married, but continues present law credit of $400 for each dependent.

Imposes new surtaxes on individual incomes, beginning at 6 per cent on the first taxable dollar and ranging to 77 per cent on the highest. Surtax absorbs present 10 per cent defense tax. Normal 4 per cent tax continued.

Provides a new simplified income tax form for optional use of persons earning under $3000, who may merely look up their tax on a table, instead of computing it.

Levies 6 per cent surtax on the first $25,000 of corporate net income and a 7 per cent surtax on income in excess of that. Absorbs 10 per cent defense tax in present normal corporate tax.

Increases corporation excess profits tax rates 10 percentage points in each rate bracket but gives taxpayers the present law choice of computing excess profits on the basis of invested capital or average earnings.

Increases capital stock tax from $1.10 to $1.25 per $1000, with provision for annual declaration of capital stock value.

Retains the increases in estate and gift tax rates voted by the House but merges in these by fractional increases the present special 10 per cent defense tax.

Provides that excise taxes provided in the bill shall take effect October 1. The Treasury estimates it has been losing more than two million dollars a day by delayed enactment of the taxes.

Imposes $5 use tax on automobiles and increases 3½ per cent excise on autos to 7 per cent.

Night club and cabaret bills taxed 5 per cent and transportation costing over 35 cents, 5 per cent.

3½ Million Sought For D. C. Health

962,907 as against 946,907 preventable diseases, $51,824, as against $46,176; tuberculosis, including personal services, $64,330 as against $52,110 for this year; venereal diseases, $72,180, as against $38,570.

Cancer Control Urged

It was also proposed that a syphilis control program be inaugurated to include college and high school students. The health authorities also recommended a cancer control program and said:

"In view of cancer prevalence here, the department recommends the government to institute a program for control of cancer. In 1940, the death rate was 151.7 (per 100,000) and 1006 died."

In asking for additional venereal clinics, the department said their personnel should be increased 75 per cent.

For laboratories, $72,094 was asked, as against $51,314, for the maintenance, personal services, manufacture of serums and examination of typhoid, tuberculosis and malaria specimens, and analysis of milk, ice cream, food, drugs and veneral disease specimens. It also wanted $1230 for additional animals for experimental purposes and $530 with which to feed guinea pigs, rabbits and mice now on hand.

Call for More Clerks

The report adds that in the next fiscal year, more than 10,000 persons are expected to be admitted to clinics in Southwest Washington: tuberculosis, 2300; dental, 3200; veneral, 3000, and maternal and child welfare, 600. In 1940, 25,000 persons were admitted to hospitals under the supervision of the department.

Because of the rapid growth of the city, the department said, it is now two or three months behind in answering correspondence. It said that additional clerical help is needed.

For the completion of the health center in Northwest Washington, $115,000 was asked. More than $156,000 is needed, it said, for inspection of sewers, dairy farms, air in public buildings and schools, medicines and liquors.

The department seeks $309,351 for the Tuberculosis Sanitoria at Glenn Dale, Md., an increase of $141,391. A bureau of mental hygiene also would be set up to operate a clinic for mental hygiene to help pupils who need aid "to become adjusted to their environments." The department said this service was requested by the Board of Education and recommended in the Jacob Keppes report. The personal service costs would be $16,800.

Request for Hospitals

The department proposed a total of $1,338,517 for Gallinger Hospital. This is an increase of but $17,847. The funds are sought for X-ray service, ward service, treatment service, jail service, maintenance and laundry.

Five Washington hospitals were listed for the same amounts as this year. They are Emergency, $80,000; Casualty, $70,000; Columbia, $5,000; Washington Home for Incurables, $15,000, and Children's, $85,000.

Price Fixing Asked By Liquor Dealers

Drama Is Tried As Mental Cure

Moreno puts it.

The couple talked about their daughter's stay at camp, argued good-naturedly over what radio program to select. The wife even prepared for her husband a make-believe sandwich and glass of tomato juice. (Sole stage properties were a table and a few chairs, arranged on the small, circular stage by the players themselves.)

A Spirited Performance

More spirited was the performance by a young woman who apparently does not get along well with her mother. The latter was impersonated first by Miss Frances Herriott, director of the St. Elizabeths psychodrama theater. Then, at Dr. Moreno's direction, the patient herself took the mother's role while another patient pretended she was the misunderstood, browbeaten daughter.

"Remember," said Mrs. X, the daughter, when the playlet was ended, "they promised that nothing I said on the stage would be held against me."

Her sagacious remark, accompanied with a broad grin, was greeted by laughter from the audience and an understanding nod by attendants.

Characters in the third sketch were a young former soldier, who was admitted to St. Elizabeths after a mental condition had been revealed by letters he wrote to members of Congress, and a former surgeon who is on the road to recovery.

In this playlet, the former soldier disclosed facets of his personality in an interview with Senator ——, which role was taken by the former surgeon.

The fourth and last demonstration presented a middle-aged woman patient who seems to be having a feud with another patient in her ward.

Sponsors Confident

To say more than this about the four playlets, to expose any of the impromptu dialogue—and much of it was quite humorous—might jeopardize the success of future sessions, it was explained.

"The patients read the newspapers," reminded Miss Margaret Hagan, American Red Cross field director who was instrumental in organizing the theater.

Dr. Moreno, foremost exponent of psychodrama therapy, is confident that it will eventually prove its worth, even to the most pronounced skeptics (of whom there are many), as a form of treatment.

Meantime, the work will be continued at St. Elizabeths, where several score patients have been introduced to the spectacular innovation with results that are held to be encouraging.

French Gold in U. S. Attached by Poles

selor of the Embassy of Poland in the United States, with headquarters at 14 Wall Street, explained that the Central Bank of Poland had gold reserves equivalent to 90 million dollars, of which 20 million dollars had been shipped to England, the United States and Canada several months before the German invasion of Poland. The remaining 70 million dollars was shipped from Poland before the Germans got to Warsaw. Despite many difficulties, he said, 64 million dollars reached France safely and was turned over to the Bank of France for safekeeping. A total of three million dollars was left with the Rumanian Central Bank, which amount has been turned over to the Polish Relief Commission, Inc., and the remaining three million dollars was shipped to England and Canada.

Zoltowski revealed that the French West African port of Dakar figured with the Polish gold as with the Belgian gold that had been given to the Bank of France for safekeeping. He also revealed that apparently Dakar was in far greater danger of capture at the time of the assault last year by British and Free French forces under Gen. Charles De Gaulle than had been supposed. The Dakar forces, he said, fearful of capture, had moved the gold about 400 miles inland to the town of Cayes. From that point, under German pressure on the Vichy government, the gold presumably has all been taken back to France and turned over to the German authorities.

"At the time of the German invasion of France in the spring of 1940," Zoltowski said, "the Bank of France was evacuating its own gold to the United States. The Bank of France offered to evacuate the Polish gold along with its own, and this was agreed to by the Bank of Poland. The Polish gold was not sent to the United States but, after much delay, was shipped to Dakar just at the time when armistice negotiations had been undertaken between the French and the Germans."

Our Southern Boundary

Senator McCarran appears to have hit upon an expedient by which land owned by the Government on the south shore of the Potomac adjacent to Washington may be brought within the jurisdiction of the District. His study of the problem appears to date back to the debate over location of a War Department building on the old experimental farm. The General Assembly of Virginia passed a special act ceding jurisdiction over this area to the Federal Government prior to its purchase. Whether that jurisdiction is complete and exclusive is debatable, but there seems to be no question that Virginia could by appropriate act yield all vestige of control over land in this area now owned by the Federal Government.

In giving Congress exclusive powers of legislation over the District the Constitution provides that Congress may "exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, and arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings." In other words, Congress may, with the consent of Virginia, exercise the same authority over the new War Department building site, the experimental farm, the old airport, the new National Airport, Arlington Cemetery, Fort Myer and all connecting highways that it now exercises over the District. These areas are now in effect a part of the Capital. Certainly there would be a real advantage in bringing them under a single administrative unit so far as municipal services and planning are concerned.

The arrangement with Virginia could be made flexible so that all Arlington County land adjacent to the District that might be taken over by the Government in the future would automatically become part of Washington. That would not solve the problem of zoning other parts of Arlington County in harmony with development of the Capital. But it would admirably settle present difficulties over the unmarked boundary. And it might prove to be an important first step toward the retrocession of Arlington to the District.

Forgetting Unity

Thousands of citizens must have blinked and looked again when they first saw the announcement of President Roosevelt's article in Collier's Weekly, which rehashes the "famous Supreme Court fight" of 1937. For it is difficult to imagine a more untimely moment to rekindle the antagonisms which grew out of that contest. With the country facing an international crisis, national unity is no less important than the speedy production of weapons for defense. The people must pull together in a singleness of purpose to accomplish the truly gigantic task which has been undertaken through the President's leadership. Yet he has interjected into this situation an extremely controversial defense of his efforts to reorganize the Supreme Court.

Mr. Roosevelt accuses the old court of erecting "athwart the path of progress" a barrier "which it was impossible to climb over, under or around." He ignores the fact that several pieces of legislation invalidated by the court were later upheld when their unconstitutional elements had been eliminated. He skips over the failure of the Administration to propose constitutional amendments when it wished to exercise powers the court believed it did not possess. In declaring that the road to solution of economic and social problems seemed to be "completely blocked" he goes so far as to write: "For a dead hand was being laid upon this whole program of progress—to stay it all. It was the hand of the Supreme Court of the United States."

In general the President's barbs are aimed at the "old court," but not all the present jurists escape unscathed. The President complains with special emphasis about the decision which invalidated the NRA. But that unanimous opinion, along with several others which the President condemns, was sustained by Justice Stone, whom the President recently elevated to the Chief Justiceship. Many jurists as well as laymen interested in genuine court reforms keenly regret such reflections upon judges who consistently take a broad view of the Constitution but are not willing to abandon completely its restraining influence.

Mr. Roosevelt's article, which is part of his introduction to forthcoming volumes of his state papers, bristles with arguments and statements that scholars and historians will some day challenge. But for the moment its unfortunate timing overshadows all other considerations. At a time when vast powers must be concentrated in the Presidency for the safety of the Nation he has unnecessarily reopened old wounds and referred back to a controversy which, more than any other, weakened his leadership. Surely the President was not thinking in terms of national unity to meet the problem at hand when he permitted this injudicious article to go out under his name.

Navy In Action

The only surprising thing about the submarine attack on the U. S. S. Greer off Iceland is that it did not come earlier. For many months now the Navy has been helping to keep the Atlantic sea lanes open. This is being done by a patrol system. The patrols have a triple job on their hands—to act as eyes and ears for the British navy, to protect the supplies which our factories are turning out for the fighting British, and to safeguard our line of communication with American-occupied Iceland. There has never been any secret about such an undertaking. President Roosevelt on more than one occasion has explained it. And the people in various polls have shown that they are overwhelmingly back of the President in his insistence upon a course of action which upholds our traditional policy of freedom of the seas. Risks are attached to any such assertion, as a matter of course, since Hitler, who has set out to conquer the Atlantic, has never disguised his determination to challenge our American policy. He has delayed till now, however, from making any overt move to give force to his challenge.

Our reaction should be clear in the face of a challenge that is now clothed with torpedoes. We should stick to our purpose. Indeed, a new positiveness should take the place of the half-passive, half-active policy in the Atlantic—the same positiveness which at last has come over our policy in the Pacific. We shall find that the Nazi's bluff is as full of the rank wind as the Japanese's, and thrives on the half measures which we have hitherto opposed to it. The notion that we should merely help the British to keep the sea lanes free and open does little credit to our statesmanship. Nazi Germany's bid for control of the Atlantic—which would usher Naziism into the entire glacis of this hemisphere—concerns the United States more than any other power. For this reason there should be no hesitation in throwing our naval forces into the task of clearing the Atlantic of the Nazi marauders. The American people, who are now recapturing the "thinking in oceans" which preoccupied their forefathers, have shown themselves willing to take risks when American interests of such magnitude are at stake. There is no need to worry about giving a name to the act of throwing a gangster out of your front yard.

Nailing A Lie

Figures cannot lie, and the figures on the oil tanker shortage as spread before the Senate committee investigating Eastern seaboard petroleum shortages were sufficient to persuade the committeemen that Britain had not misused any American tankers. This will strengthen the President's answer to this persistent and widespread charge. The final anti-lend-lease effort to make an issue out of this charge came during the Senate committee's investigation. The London Economist was quoted as showing that the British had unnecessarily obtained the use of American tankers. But what was quoted on the Economist's authority was written as the substance of American complaints. This comes out clearly enough to anybody who reads the article in question.

This particular charge is only one of many charges aimed at proving that lend-lease funds are being misused. The billing to lend-lease of dining and wining in a Washington restaurant is the most fantastic. Senator Tobey, of New Hampshire, brings it up again. Oblivious of the fact that the President has already dealt with the canard, he asks the President for the facts. Why not, for a change, ask the restaurant concerned, since the name is always coupled with the stories? Senator Tobey ought to know that, even if the British were equal to this kind of thing, such a situation is rendered impossible by the checks on expenditures exercised by the lend-lease authority.

No doubt these wild charges are in part responsible for the dissatisfaction which has lately been displayed in the British press about the extent of our lend-lease aid. That aid is far less than most people suppose, or, as Raymond Clapper put it, than our glowing words would indicate. It is so small that its very smallness calls for supplementary measures to show that our acts comport with our policy. President Roosevelt seems to imply that such supplementary measures are under way. This is the best way to counteract the gossip. If our national goal, as the President has constantly reaffirmed, is to see that Hitlerism is crushed, in commonsense it should be pursued relentlessly. By hitting soft, in Theodore Roosevelt's phrase, we invite the kind of aguish disorder within our society which gives the whisperers their opportunity.

Distributing Contracts

By executive order a new Division of Contract Distribution is to take over and expand the activities now being carried on by the defense contract service of the OPM. Heading this new unit, which will rank alongside the Procurement, Priorities, Labor and Civilian Supply Divisions of the OPM, is Floyd Odlum, well known public utility executive and financier. Mr. Odlum's position is one requiring a high degree of administrative ability, as indicated by the varied and difficult tasks assigned to the new organization. It will be called upon, for instance, to work out plans for breaking down large orders into smaller units, so that defense work can be spread among smaller firms, and over wider areas. The division is also expected to encourage the expansion of subcontracting and the pooling of plant facilities, to assist in obtaining jobs for workers made idle by shutdowns of nondefense factories, and to develop programs for the conversion of plants and equipment to defense use.

Not a single objective mentioned in the executive order presents new problems to the OPM. Defense officials have been trying all along (although with very indifferent results) to promote subcontracting and to relieve the concentration of defense orders. One great obstacle to progress along these lines has been lack of cooperation on the part of Army and Navy procurement officials, who naturally prefer to deal with the larger firms of proven capacity to fill orders. Under the previous setup the OPM was severely handicapped because it could act only in an advisory capacity to Army and Navy procurement agencies. It might suggest plans for splitting up orders and encouraging subcontracting, but it could do nothing if those plans were ignored. Now the SPAB, the new board which heads the defense organization, cannot only decide on general policies relating to priorities and allocation of scarce supplies; it can also make its decisions effective through such capable executives as Mr. Odlum. Subordinate operating divisions cannot, of course, function efficiently unless they have the support of the SPAB. But with that support they can work much more effectively, knowing that well laid plans will become a guide to action.

The Rail Strike Vote

Although the railway unions have voted by an overwhelming majority in favor of a strike to enforce their wage demands, actual suspension of operations is a remote and unlikely possibility. As the chairman of the carriers' joint conference committee has said, the vote was really a ballot for a fact-finding board, not a ballot for a strike. The National Mediation Board has tried and failed to bring about a settlement of the dispute; the unions have rejected arbitration. The next step in the procedure laid down by the Railway Labor Act calls for appointment of a fact-finding board by the President.

Heretofore the force of public opinion has caused the decisions of such fact-finding boards to be accepted by both parties, although the findings are not binding on either side. The important fact is that the long drawn out procedure called for by law can be relied upon to effect a considerable cooling of tempers and to create an atmosphere favorable to compromise. First, the board will be allowed 30 days to complete its investigations and then another 30 days must elapse before changes in existing wage contracts can be made. So far the system has worked admirably to prevent strikes and lockouts. But it is also true that peace has been preserved by making generous concessions to the unions at the expense of the financially hard pressed carriers.

The latest demands of the unions are so extreme that no fact-finding inquiry is needed to demonstrate their unreasonableness. At the same time a general strike tying up the country's rail facilities would be such a catastrophe that the mere threat puts the unions in a very strategic bargaining position. For that very reason their persistence in holding to extreme demands, evidencing a desire to turn the national emergency to their own advantage, reflects seriously upon the character of their leadership. As we have frequently said, a mediatory system like that established under the Railway Labor Act proves its value not merely by its record for averting strikes but also by the character of the settlements achieved. So that system now faces a test of unprecedented severity.

THE STORM ALONE

The sky's tremendous anger voiced in long
Barbaric chords of thunder, and the swift
Arpeggios of lightning; clouds that drift
As in a furious sea; and then the song
Of summer rain descending in a strong
Crescendo over swaying trees that lift
Their boughs in mute thanksgiving, like a throng
Of supplicants, to take the tempest's gift:

These have amazed me, startled me to joy.
These have possessed my senses utterly.
And listening, I know what God must be,
Yet find no man-made word I can employ
To name His beauty, His magnificence:
The storm alone must voice His excellence.

Judges In Politics

The Supreme Court being an important department of the Government, it is not at all unbecoming but a duty for a member of that court to speak on behalf of the liberty and independence of the Government. Judges are not in politics in any improper way when they seek to strengthen the morale of the Nation for defense against such a menace of military might as now threatens the world. Therefore The Post's letter correspondents who have charged improper political activity to the several Justices of the Supreme Court who have recently delivered addresses of the character indicated are unnecessarily disturbed.

That they are moved in this matter by partisan motive would seem to be indicated by such flings as that "nine politicians have been appointed to the Supreme Court during the last eight years." I had not had the impression that Justice Roberts, who is accused of "soapbox stumping," was ever distinguished as a politician. And this may be said of others of the nine members, including Chief Justice Stone. Others are no more politicians than many, among whom may be mentioned the great Marshall, appointed to the Supreme Court throughout its history. Why is it that the appointment of men of political experience, which has obtained all along, is so obnoxious when done by Roosevelt? The explanation, of course, is partisanship and bigotry. JOHN D. BRADLEY.

Crime Cause

Jarvis Catoe's confession that the heinous crimes he committed were brought about through "spells" induced by seeing indecent pictures of women and through reading stories of crime is a scathing rebuke to our day. How many will give a thought to the cause that may be responsible for many more of the crimes committed.

It is a disgrace to us all that we allow to be published the indecent stories and pictures that fill the magazines with which our news stands are flooded. Also, that we stand by and permit the movies, stage shows, and newspapers in their display of unclad women to use as a screen the claim that they are giving the people what they want.

It is high time that all decent thinking people awaken to a sense of their responsibility, and demand clean shows, clean literature, and less familiarity with crime than has been fed to present-day children and youth. CLARION CALL.

A Private's Plea

Listen, Congress won't you hear my poor plea?
After all, your actions do affect me.
I beg, don't wave the flag, don't ring
the bell,
Don't send your sons to some far away hell.
Don't go to all that phrase-making bother
For it was a phrase that killed my father.
While the A. E. F. is in the offin'
Think of the grief that shadows a coffin.
Think of nights to come when you'll toss in bed
And dream of men now far away and dead.
Think of arms, legs hands, eyes,
lost last World War
Think of these when you're urged by FDR.
I'll die, sure, not afraid of Hitler's scare,
But let death greet me here, not
"over there."

Italians In America

The Washington Post of August 23 carried a dispatch from Atlantic City, briefly reporting the action of the seventeenth biennial convention of the Supreme Lodge of the Order of the Sons of Italy in America. The dispatch, under the caption of "Loyal to United States" and "Italians on Record Against Fascism," quoted a resolution which had been passed by the convention—the latter representing a total membership of 500,000, the largest representative organization of Italian extraction outside of Italy. The resolution presented the following:

> We pledge ourselves, our organization and our resources to defense of the United States against all enemies. We pledge our opposition to the spreading in the United States of communism, nazism and fascism, and all other doctrines which tend to undermine or destroy the democratic form of government.

The writer was present in Atlantic City during the convention, stopping, as usual, at one of the Italian hotels. The atmosphere presented by the hotel visitors appeared fascistic and the distorted sentiments of the fascist propagandists were in evidence. These included sentiments against America, against President Roosevelt, and claims of unjust dealing with Italy, Mussolini and the Italian people. The majority of the visitors were against England and condemned the position taken by the U. S. A., in this respect. They complained of discrimination in America against Italians in general because the latter feel it to be their duty to remain in sympathy with the welfare of their mother country, with Mussolini, fascism and a new world order under the direction of the Axis consideration.

The Italo-Americans with a different viewpoint, being antifascist, antinazi and anticommunist, being for democracy and against dictators and aggression, and firm in their support of the United States and the form of its government and its policies in the present world conflict, have had a hard time in trying to make the fascist proselytes understand the possible consequences of their inconsistent and dangerous position, whether they be American citizens or not.

The action of the Sons of Italy at the Atlantic City convention has been clear and definite; the same action was taken at the last New York State Sons of Italy convention—as well as by other Italo-American organizations. It is evident that with each coming day there are more Italians being convinced that you cannot be half for the U. S. A. and half for some other country that is in political conflict or at war with Uncle Sam. The persons who have helped to build the fascist propaganda here, especially as related to support for their mother country, have created a situation that today has become sorrowful for them, because they now see that the leaders are changing their tune, and reversing themselves gradually, so as to be safe in this country and to have the respect of the community. To avoid discrimination against Italians in this country would be unnecessary if the Italians were loyal to this country and would perform their duty. IGNATIUS GERACI.

Washington, Aug. 28.

Draftees' Pay

A trainee in an encampment has rebelled against soldiering under what unionism terms "unfair" conditions. He complains that the workman in the factory is receiving $100 per week, while he receives $21 per month for his task.

Rebellion against authority is not the trainee's proper remedy, though frequently that is our way of protesting against uncomfortable laws. Instead, he should demand parity with other mechanics in the defense effort. We say "other mechanics" because in the mechanized warfare of today all soldiers are practically mechanics. The factory worker handles the soldier's equipment in the first processes. The soldier uses and keeps it in condition thereafter.

If it be granted that the work of both is in the same class or "jurisdiction", (eliminating from the comparison actual combat with the enemy) and in consequence parity should rule in the matter of their pay two ways present themselves to effect the equalization. Either the workman's pay must be reduced to that received by the soldier (God forbid!) or the soldier's compensation must be brought up to that of the worker, making proper deductions for other than money benefits in establishing parity.

The soldier cannot expect labor to forego the exploitation of the war situation nor to come to his rescue by voluntarily reducing his own pay. He can, however, look to Congress. That body has power to raise his pay to parity with workers, even as it raises farm income to parity with industry.

Democracy Defined

Having listened to Messrs. Wheeler and Lindbergh charging that we are losing our democracy, which is representative government, by subterfuge, I'm at a loss to know whether or not they believe in representative government, as they propose direct action by plebiscite.

Democracy is government by representation and not plebiscitum direct. By universal franchise representatives are elected with delegated authority to speak and act for the whole people, and this authority is not withdrawable during the specified term. And yet, these men, falsely charging the loss of our democracy are the ones advocating stabbing our system in the back and substituting direct action by plebiscite.

How any man with horse sense can espouse plebiscitum action in place of representative action, especially in matters of foreign policy, is beyond comprehension. That some of our representatives appear to be more concerned about reelection than the duty bound exercise of delegated authority is a misfortune.

The situation is so well expressed in a letter from Mr. Mark Sullivan that I'm taking the privilege to quote him as follows:

"I think that the increasing dependence of some of our Congressmen and Government leaders upon the findings of the various national polls is a dangerous symptom. Whether they are ignorant of the theory of our system of Government, or whether they are unwilling to accept the full responsibility of their position, I do not know. In either case, the practice of relying and acting upon the snap judgment of the people on matters upon which they are not sufficiently informed to deliver an intelligent opinion can only lead to serious trouble."

The Post Impressionist

Man on the Fly

There is no doubt in my mind any more that, as entomologists have been saying, this is the age of insects, and I don't mean Hitler. Man may think he is the chief mogul of this planet, but he is fooling himself. Man is but a helpless biped. He cannot even walk on the ceiling.

Even up until last Sunday morning I was willing to call it a draw. But not now. I had, that night, fallen into the arms of Morpheus with some difficulty, due to a slight insomnia and to my wife's intermittent but insistent whistling to a cocker-spaniel bitch named Wuppie for whom the moon held more allure than a waiting dog-biscuit. Finally, however, after the dog was in, the sheep had all been counted and corralled, and the neighbor's radio stilled, I fell into a blissful sleep, with a genuine though slightly cynical smile curled around the corners of my mouth. Along about 4 a. m., I was later told, four fire engines scampered by to a suburban blaze, but I did not awaken.

But at 5:45 a. m., just as rosy-fingered dawn and the milkman were beginning to stir, my hand shot out in unconscious pursuit. It did not, I am sure, realize what it was after, but since self preservation is man's prime instinct, I suppose his muscles, members and senses are attuned involuntarily to that single purpose. But erring instinct erred again, and my lethargic hand missed the object of its onslaught—a single housefly (Musca domestica) that had been exploring the tender epidermis of my right temple.

I don't want to make too much of this fly incident. It is something that has happened to everybody. I merely want to emphasize how completely conquered I was. I was licked. I was not ready to get up. I wasn't hungry. I didn't want to read. I didn't feel like an early-morning hike in the chigger-infested woods. What I wanted was to go back to sleep, but a little, black, flying, crawling thing with two diaphanous wings, six tickling feet and a snooping proboscis said no.

The other day I helped a friend and neighbor of mine tear down his front porch in preparation for the control of termites. We could see where these insects had begun to work and had already undermined the porch foundations. They would, if unimpeded, get into the whole house wherever there were wooden sills, beams and supports. The house might even fall in. It was something to ponder on. I now have not the slightest doubt in the world that someday the earth will be conquered and overrun by termites, for when it comes to insects I am no longer incredulous. I remember what one puny fly had done to me, a human mechanism. What, indeed, could a whole army of termites, probably the most socialized group of all the animal kingdom, do to a human habitation, to the human race!

I have before me a note printed in a entomological journal telling how yellowjackets have been making it hot for campers in California this summer. "According to quarantine officers stationed at Lake Tahoe," it says, "people moved from camps at the north end of the lake en masse because of numerous stings and the necessity of having to compete with the wasps (Vespula pennsylvanica) for every mouthful of food eaten. Yellowjackets continuously feed their young with raw meat in the form of caterpillars, bits of dead fish washed up on lake and stream margins, or steaks from the dinner table . . . Stings often resulted in painful swellings several inches across and inflamed at the center." Man, it seems may be the noblest of God's creatures, but to a yellowjacket he is just another piece of raw meat. Some people, appalled by their own insignificance, are humiliated no end when they view the Grand Canyon, the Big Trees of California, or Niagara Falls. Henceforth I shall be humiliated whenever I see a yellowjacket. It will be a reminder of who's really boss on this planet.

If there is anyone still unconvinced that man is waging a losing fight against the class Insecta, let him delve into the statistics of economic entomology, of what it costs farmers to combat bugs, of what it costs the Government to find out what to tell the farmers to do, of the damage to man's crops, comfort and character. But let him not ponder too long on these statistics, or he will go mad. He will begin to dream at night of whole States overflowing with locusts, of great forests denuded by Japanese beetles, of clouds of malarial mosquitoes hovering over him. He will brush imaginary wood ticks from his hair and cover his sleeping eyes from the sight of his pet dog being eaten alive by fleas.

The late William Morton Wheeler, the famous entomologist of Harvard, tells of the following letter received from a gentleman in New Hampshire:

"I do not understand how it is that an insect so small as to be invisible is able to worry my dog and also at times sharply to bite myself. A vet friend of mine in Boston advised lard and kerosene for the dog. This seemed to check them for a time, but what I need is extermination, for I am in my eighty-fourth year."

It's a smart man who knows when he's licked! PAUL H. OEHSER.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Destroyer And The Tanker

IT IS A curious coincidence, if it is a coincidence, that torpedoes should have been fired at an American destroyer in the Atlantic on the very day that an American oil tanker arrived in Vladivostok across the Pacific. The last time an American ship was attacked—the case of the Robin Moor—it just happened that the pressure on Marshal Petain to accept full collaboration was reaching its climax. On the evidence available, it may be assumed that the attack on the U. S. S. Greer was, if not a mistake by a submarine commander, then an incident intended to incite Japan to aggressive action. There is as yet no evidence that Hitler himself wants just now to go to war with the United States over Iceland or anything else.

LIPPMANN

For as long as he is engaged with Russia, and while Britain stands, he has no effective means of waging war against the United States, and he has much more to lose than he has to gain by starting a naval war in the Atlantic. But if he could incite Japan to hostilities in the Pacific, he would, at least on the short view, have created a serious diversion.

IT GOES without saying that the United States will not be provoked by incidents or intimidated and deterred by incidents. We are in Iceland by agreement with the government of Iceland. The Axis has no shadow of a claim on Iceland, and our right to a free passage to Iceland, unmolested by illegal naval operations, is indisputable. Our need to exercise these rights as a measure of national self-defense is no less certain. An outpost near enough to Europe is essential to the Navy if it is to guard against surprise attack: Even if it were true that the Western Hemisphere, or North America, can be defended by the Navy and by bombers, outposts to signal the approach of the enemy—and thus to give time to assemble the defenses—are absolutely necessary. On the ultimate ground of national self-interest and national self-defense, Iceland is as necessary as Alaska, Guam and Hawaii.

Therefore, we are bound to remain in Iceland as long as the Axis threatens to unite all of Europe in one vast aggressive empire. Remaining in Iceland, we are bound to hold the seas open as we hold open the seas to other American outposts, and if their vital communications are attacked, to repel the attack.

o+o

THE POSITION in the Northern Pacific is no less solidly founded. Japan is not at war with Russia. In fact Japan not only has a treaty with Russia which guarantees freedom of access to Vladivostok but she has also a very recently signed treaty with Russia promising not to go to war with Russia. In asking us to forego the right to ship goods to Siberia, the Japanese are asking us to agree not only to suspend our own rights but to connive at the violation of these treaties and to participate passively in a blockade, that is to say in a war, against Russia. They themselves, having been actively at war with China for four years, feel aggrieved when we reduce our shipments of war supplies to Japan. Yet, though they are not at war with Russia, they ask us to do to Russia acts which when done by us to belligerent Japan have evoked outcries and reprisals. Then to top it all, they suggest that we come to a new agreement with them based upon their violation of their treaties and on our betrayal of China, the Netherlands, Britain and Russia. What faith do they think we could put in an agreement which originated in such faithlessness?

WERE the United States to agree to the Japanese demands, permitting Japan to blockade Siberia, we should not earn the friendship of Japan and we should certainly earn the enmity or contempt of all our other neighbors in the Pacific. We should have prepared the ground in Siberia either for a Japanese conquest or for an Axis-controlled Russian government. Whereas now Siberia stands as a powerful check on Japan, we should have freed Japan for her adventures and acquired as our nearest neighbor in Alaska another dangerous enemy.

In fact, Japan's willingness to let us send supplies to Siberia is the acid test of her good faith not only as respects her treaties with Russia but as respects any other promises she may make anywhere else in the Pacific. Japanese promises have not been well kept since 1931. Their value would drop to zero if now, after Mr. Matsuoka's recent journey to Moscow, the new treaty of nonaggression were scrapped. The very fact that the Japanese government wants to scrap that treaty along with all the others in the Pacific is conclusive evidence that a strong Siberia is an essential guaranty against further aggression and, therefore, that a strong Siberia is a vital interest of the United States.

Capital Gains Tax

Favors Lower Rates

The current emergency requires increased national revenue. Most of the proposals in the current revenue bill involve greater burdens upon the taxpayer. However, there is one exception. It concerns the capital gains tax, which could produce an additional 100 million to 400 million dollars. The desirable revisions of the capital gains tax include: (1) Segregate capital gains and losses from regular incomes, (2) restrict offset losses to segregated gains, (3) eliminate the holding period, (4) carry losses forward for two years. Such modification will benefit the general economy and substantially increase Government revenue.

Stronger than any brief and more eloquent than any argument is the simple summary of statistics of a Government document, the report to the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, "Million Dollar Incomes," 1938. This report (pp. 42, 43) shows that when the rates of tax on capital gains are high, the taxpayer takes gains in small measure and loans in large measure. On the other hand, when the rates of tax on capital gains are low, the taxpayer cashes in on his capital gains liberally and realizes losses sparingly.

What do the Government's figures show? During the period of high tax rates, 1917-21, net gains were 0.89 per cent of total income and net losses were over 24 per cent of total income. When rates were reduced from 1922 to 1924, net gains reported rose to 48 per cent and net losses reported fell to 13 per cent. The boom period is omitted because, under low taxes and high profits, the results show much higher net gains and practically no net losses. However, in the period 1930-31, though shares prices were falling, yet under low tax rate net gains reported were 30 per cent of total income and net losses 59 per cent. In the period 1932-36, when shares prices were rising, yet under a high tax net gains fell to 10 per cent of total income and net losses rose to 56 per cent of total income. The official statistics confirm common sense conclusions.

Furthermore, in 1938 the Treasury for the first time segregated short-term gains from long-term gains in the report "Statistics of Incomes for 1938." Short-term capital gains are taxed at graduated income tax rates. But long-term gains are taxed at a flat rate. These two different methods of taxing furnish a good experiment on comparative productivity of rates. In the lowest income group, short-term capital gains reported were 150 per cent as much as long-term capital gains. But in the highest income group, subject to the maximum income tax, short-term capital gains virtually disappear. They are less than three-tenths of 1 per cent of long-term gains.

Restating the thesis, on long-term gains the lowest income group reported 30 million dollars and the highest income group reported twice as much, or 60 million dollars. As for short-term gains, the lowest income group reported 46 million dollars and the highest income group reported not twice as much—92 million dollars—but only $175,000 or .4 of 1 per cent as much. Presumably, if the short-term rates were relatively as low as the long-term rates, the Government would have had an additional 250 million dollars subject to tax. The following is the official table showing the relation of short-term gains taxed at high rates to long-term gains at low rates for the year 1938:

Net Income classes (thousands of dollars)	Returns with net income	Short Term Capital Gain	Long Term Capital Gain	Ratio % (Short to Long —millions of dollars—
Under $5	.....	$46	$30	151
5-10	.....	30	23	130
10-25	.....	31	33	91
25-50	.....	14	23	60
50-100	.....	7	21	32
100-150	.....	2	12	18
150-300	.....	1	20	5.7
300-500	.....	*	16	1.5
500-1000	.....	*	22	1.1
Over $1000	....	*	61	0.3

*Less than $250,000.

The above table confirms the conclusion that the higher the rate of tax on capital gains, the less the short-term gains realized and the less the Treasury receipts.

Can Congress ignore these facts in framing the present tax bill?

The Gallup Poll

61% Think Draftees' Morale Is Fair to Good While 25% Are Unfavorably Impressed

By American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 5.—While commentators and military men have been discussing the moot question of whether the draftees' morale is as good as it should be or not, the Institute of Public Opinion has obtained the impressions of ordinary citizens in all parts of the country on the subject.

Since the average American knows one or more of the men in draft camps personally—either as a member of the family or as a friend—responses have probably been colored by individual stories and experiences, rather than by over-all observation.

Nevertheless, the results show that while one person in four thinks the draftees' morale is "poor," a substantially larger number say they are satisfied it is "good."

Friends Impressed

And, interestingly enough, those who have personal acquaintances in the Army at the present time (about four out of every five persons) are better impressed with Army "morale" than those who don't. Voters in the survey were asked:

"From what you have heard or read, do you think the morale of drafted men in the Army is good or poor?"

The answers are:

Think Morale Good	39%
Think Morale Fair	22
Think Morale Poor	25
Undecided	14

If only those with definite opinions are considered, the results indicate that 45 per cent consider morale good, 26 per cent call it fair and 29 per cent think it poor.

Why They Think So

"Extension of the draft period" and "loss of private jobs and opportunities" were given chief blame by those who consider morale poor.

Other main factors, according to those voters, are confusion in the draftee's mind as to just why he is in training, the lack of military equipment in some units, lack of "things to do" and lack of discipline or lack of confidence in individual officers.

Sectional Vote

The predominant group of voters in each section of the country said they thought morale was good, although the survey reveals some interesting contrasts across the map.

In the Middle West, for instance, where the draft was originally greeted with less enthusiasm than elsewhere, 37 per cent thought morale was good, whereas 41 per cent thought so in the South and 42 per cent in the Rocky Mountain and West Coast States.

British Now Insisting Iran Turn Over Axis 'Technicians'

By Russell Hill

Teheran, Iran, Sept. 5.—While 600 German nationals live packed like sardines inside their legation's compound, their lot is being decided by negotiations between the Iranian government on the one hand, and British and Soviet diplomatic missions on the other.

Just outside the city limits of Iran's capital, there is a small enclosed area in which are the German Legation's summer offices. Every yard of this ground is covered by tents which have sprung up to accommodate those who until recently stayed in Teheran's best hotels and villas.

Hundreds of others have fled into the provinces fearing the occupation of the capital. They have retreated deep into the interior of the country to such places as Yezd Shiraz and Isfahan.

Wanted by Allies

Two weeks ago they did not want to leave Iran. Now they are afraid they will not be able to.

For the Allied governments will no longer be satisfied with the departure of the Nazi agents. They are anxious to put their hands on the men and women, many of whom have preceded Hitler's armies in Copenhagen, Oslo, Amsterdam, Bucharest and Sofia. Many of them are worth hundreds, perhaps thousands, of well trained front line soldiers. They are the ones who win the bloodless victories.

So far the British demand that these people be surrendered has been evaded here. There has been neither refusal nor acquiescence. It has been promised that the Germans will have left the country within a week, but that is no longer what is required.

There is also a large number of pro-Axis non-Germans upon whom it is desired to lay hands. Apart from Italian, Iranian, and Hungarian nationals, many of whom are suspect, there is a whole group of political refugees who flocked into this country from Syria and Iraq, after the failure of pro-Axis movement.

Grand Mufti Shining Mark

Heading the list is the famed Grand Mufti, who led the Arab movement which opposed the Zionists in Palestine. His seat was in Jerusalem. From there he organized the abortive but bloody Arab revolt in Palestine. Finally he was beaten but escaped across the desert into Iraq. The British put a price upon his head.

In Iraq the Grand Mufti worked quietly and bided his time. The time came when Raschid Ali sprung his premature coup last spring. The Mufti gave him every kind of support. Then—he was forced to flee again. This time he crossed the mountains into Iran. Raschid Ali came, too, but several weeks ago passed into Turkey. From there he can easily reach German-occupied territory.

But the Grand Mufti has not left Iran. He is still in the country—somewhere.

One rumor had it that the Iranian authorities had taken him in Zenjan, but that town has been occupied by the Russians. The best guess is that he is hiding either in some remote mountain fastness or very near at hand under the roof of a German or Italian legation.

The British hope that the Iranian government will cooperate in securing these hostile agents. If the cooperation is satisfactory Teheran will remain in the unoccupied part of Iran. If not, the British or Russians may be forced to move in. The soldiers remain in their positions outside the city while the diplomats attempt to settle these issues.

5 Millions' Arms Contracts Halted by New Jersey Strike

Work on more than five million dollars worth of ammunition contracts at the Crucible Steel Co's Atha plant in Harrison, N. J., was halted last night as the result of a walkout of maintenance men.

The company announced it was forced to shut the plant since the maintenance men were vital to its operation. The action came as Federal, company and C. I. O. union representatives ended a conference in a futile attempt to bring about a settlement. The plant employs 3200.

The maintenance men, C. I. O. union members, struck Wednesday against what they described as company "abuses" of working agreements. This involved, they said, shifts in working days to avoid payment of time and a half for overtime.

A request by the Defense Mediation Board that production proceed in Alabama's coal mines pending a hearing next Wednesday was under consideration by the C. I. O.-United Mine Workers. An estimated 20,000 men were idle as a result of the cancellation by the union Thursday of a temporary agreement in effect since May 8.

In Lorain, Ohio, a representative of the C. I. O. Marine and Shipbuilders Workers Union estimated operations at the plant of the American Ship Building Co. were 15 per cent of normal. About 1100 are employed building naval and commercials ships. The union called a strike to protest the firm's recognition of the A. F. of L. as bargaining representative.

Employes of the Kansas City Power and Light Co. were asked by the Mediation Board to call off a strike set for tomorrow. The board announced it would hold a hearing on the case September 15.

Officials said 350 workers were involved and that the issue was the right of collective bargaining in the overhead and steam distribution departments.

The board also asked 2800 striking employes of the Pressed Steel Car Co. at McKees Rocks, Pa., to go back to work pending a hearing on a dispute involving questions of representation. The strike started August 29. Workers include members of the C. I. O. Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and the Independent Car and Foundry Workers Union.

Meanwhile, Arthur S. Meyer, chairman of the New York State Board of Mediation, last night recommended that the National Defense Mediation Board make further efforts to settle the dispute between the Consolidated Edison Company of New York and Local 3 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (A. F. L.).

Meyer held hearings on the dispute for seven days in New York as a special investigator for the NDMB.

After weeks of negotiation, members of Aeronautical Lodge 727, I. A. M., at a mass meeting in Burbank, Calif., rejected a proposed new contract in which the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation and its affiliate, Vega Airplane Company, offered their employees $16,712,717 in additional wages.

Rejection of the proposed new agreement by the membership of Machinists' Affiliate, an A. F. L. union, came as a distinct surprise.

The rejected contract provided for new rates of pay scaling from 60 cents per hour for unskilled beginners, with a five cent per hour raise automatically each for four weeks until a minimum of 75 cents per hour had been reached at the end of 12 weeks.

Bail-Jumping Nazi Pilot Wed

League Aide Urges That It Be Continued

Pitman B. Potter, director of the League of Nations' Geneva Research Center, last night urged continuation of the League or some similar medium of international cooperation, at a session of the Institute on World Organization at American University.

The international authority defended the League against charges of "total failure" in view of the present world conflict, declaring "a system with no radical differences" would achieve success.

He stated that among changes in the world cooperative system of the future should be increased "surrender of national sovereignty" on the part of member nations.

At the meeting in Hurst Hall, one of a series of discussions which will continue through September 13, Potter listed principal causes for failure to achieve the success expected of the League.

Among these was the fact that the international body had become caught in the "conflict between bourbons and bolsheviks" . . . between the reactionaries in national social life on one side an dthe radical revolutionaries on the other." This situation made it impossible for the League to carry out sanctions against aggression in 1935 and 1936, he said.

Urging, in conclusion, a continuation of the League of Nations idea as an instrument to "minister to international, national and individual human welfare," Potter declared:

"Let us extract the last drop of wisdom and guidance from the League experience without either overrating or underrating the importance of that experience in the evaluation of international organization."

The speaker was introduced by George Theunis, former prime minister af Belgium and president of the League of Nations World Economic Conference of 1927.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Labor Leaders Rule Labor Day

OF COURSE, Labor Day orations are often low political frauds, uttered in the interests of scheming men, but the power of tradition and publicity is great and it would be a shame to let the perpetrators get away wih their cynical imposture unchallenged. Labor Day is no longer a festival of those who do the work, but a day devoted to the mocking of the betrayed, to self-approval and mutual admiration by sordid conspirators who boss the unions and to the flattery of evil men by politicians, high and low.

PEGLER

It is as though Adolf Hitler were to select some historic day of solemn patriotic meaning to the Czechs and humiliate them by howling to the silent helpless masses that he and his political agents had freed them from themselves. Last Monday was a day of indecent sneering at millions of voiceless Americans whose right to work and select their own bargaining agents has been revoked by despicable cunning, whose wages have been chiseled of exorbitant taxes in the guise of dues and permit fees, who have been slugged and stabbed or intimidated by threats of physical and economic terror.

So arrogant were some of the speakers, so confident of their power over the robots in the ranks, that not one of them felt any necessity to refer to the crimes perpetrated by unioneers against countless individuals and against the Nation itself. Provision was made that no voice should be heard to protest against the organized rapacity, cruelty and treason of the unions, nor any reminder of the anti-American treachery of the Communists who helped to wreck France and only ten weeks ago were trying their damnedest to bring down the United States in the same humiliating ruin.

I listened to William Green and heard not one word of apology for his own willful, knowing collaboration against the workers with the underworld crooks to infest the unions of his greedy mafia, nor even a hint of perfidy which has disgraced his organization. I read the remarks of Sidney Hillman as quoted in the papers and found no condemnation of the Muscovites who lately stabbed this Nation between the shoulders and then abruptly whopped it up for war, but in defense of Russia not the United States of America.

Instead, Mr. Green claimed for himself and his associates full credit for every boon enacted by the sound American conscience of the whole Nation from the institution of the public school to the swat-the-fly movement and had the gall to boast over a national hookup that this rogue-infested mob of political highbinders had so intimidated the United States Congress as to kill every patriotic bill directed against its vicious activities.

MR. HILLMAN, whose own union in New York less than a year ago shook down American employers for political contributions for President Roosevelt's third term and threatened workers with reprisals should they exercise their political right to vote against the Administration was fetched out as an official of the Government to celebrate the subjugation of the masses.

In Scotland a more audacious kick in the teeth was fetched free men when Jack Tanner, the president of the Engineers' Union, meaning, in Americanese, the machinists, delivered in the form of a charge rather than a tribute, the allegation that an important governmental official had expressed the laudable hope that the armies of Hitler and Stalin would fight to mutual extermination, than which no patriotic American or Briton could wish a better consummation.

As will be seen in any study of the oratory which marked the day, the freedom of the human rights of the individual citizen of this Nation and Great Britain are now held to be definitely extinct. The American may not work for his living in his own country or for the defense of his own country except by the permission of some private organization enjoying a political subsidy and the right to operate a private gallows conferred by the national Government.

Though Congress may forbear to tax him lest his family want bread, Mr. Green's colleagues may extort $34 from the poorest pick-and-shovel worker as the purchase price of the right to work and levy heavily on his earnings thereafter, failing to pay which he and his may starve and he be split with a spade.

Labor Day, once the festival of united free workers, has become a day of mockery when the captors howl their own praises and the workers snuffle in their pens like showstock at a fair.

I have been guilty of two errors recently which I here acknowledge and correct with apologies to those concerned. First, I said there were two million Negroes in Puerto Rico. I am informed that the correct figures are: Whites, 1,312,496, and Negroes, 411,038.

In the other case I reported that Myron A. Wick, a vice president of Republic Steel, was a beneficiary of the officers' pension or retirement annuity plan of that company. Mr. Wick voted for this plan as a stockholder and as a member of the proxy committee at the meeting which ratified the same, but he tells me that he did not take advantage of the opportunity to acquire this generous social security at the expense of the stockholders. He was eligible, but he did not accept the benefit.

Roosevelt Names Delegates To Highway Parley in Mexico

President Roosevelt yesterday named delegations of diplomats, legislators and technicians to represent the United States at the inter-American travel and highway congresses convening in Mexico City September 15.

Announcing the personnel of the delegations, the State Department stressed the importance of the meetings to inter-American travel and continental defense.

Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, will head the delegation to the Pan American Highway Congress. The State Department said this group would give special attention to "topics affecting the Pan American highway which is assuming a position of commanding importance as an integral part of the hemispheric defense program."

Representative Kerr (Democrat), of North Carolina, will be chairman of the nine-man group representing this country at the second inter-American travel congress, meeting concurrently with the highway congress.

Members of Kerr's delegation were, Newton B. Drury, director of the National Park Service, and L. C. Elliott, regional manager, Civil Aeronautics Administration, Fort Worth, Tex.

Among the members of the 16-man delegation to the highway congress headed by Senator Lee will be Representatives Cartwright (Democrat), of Oklahoma, Luther A. Johnson (Democrat), of Texas, and Wolcott (Republican), of Michigan, and Hal G. Sours, president, American Road Builders Association, Columbus, Ohio.

Rivers Form Natural Trenches To Aid Russians in Defense

Not only the Dneiper River, which German troops have found difficulty in crossing, but most of European Russia's other rivers as well are adapted by nature for defensive warfare, points out a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

"The principal rivers rise in the north-central portion of European U. S. S. R. and flow south," continues the bulletin. "Their courses have carved a system of giant trenches running roughly northwest to southeast, one behind the other, which might be successive defensive positions to oppose the German advance from west to east.

North-South Pattern

"The Dneiper, the Don and the Volga Rivers Europe's longest, follow this north-south pattern, and constitute possible entrenchments about 1400 miles, 1300 miles and 2300 miles long, respectively. When an Ice Age glacier blocked the north, the rivers had to work their way south.

"In the sections of their course where these river giants do not flow southward, they collect southward-trending tributaries like teeth in a comb. The southeastward stretch of the Dneiper, for example, in the approximately 250 miles between Kiev and Dnepropetrovsk, receives among other streams, the Desna, the Udai, and the Sula, the Khorel and the Psel, the Vorska, the Orel and the Samara, presenting in rapid succession a series of sizable obstacles.

"The Donets Basin, cut by the next 'trench' system to the eastward, has considerable defensive value in addition to its important industrial output of military supplies. Eight large north-south tributaries fortify the river's course before the southward turn into the Don. The Don itself flowing southward toward the Cossack country, has carved out a bristling stretch of river-trench tributaries between Voronezh and Stalingrad. The Volga has filled a 560,000-square mile basin with river obstacles to east-west invasion.

Marshes Rim Valleys

"Because the Russian central plateau is generally flat, the rivers wind slowly across it and create broad valleys. For an enemy to cross them requires a maximum of exposure with a minimum of danger to defenders on opposite heights. Summer evaporation, flat beds, and seasonal droughts have made marshes a commonplace river-side feature, subject to floods in rainy seasons and during thaws.

"Crossing the rivers, even for civilian purposes has presented such an obstacle that the immemorial trend of traffic has been along them rather than over them. Bridges, therefore, are relatively rare.

Since so many of Russia's river arteries follow singularly parallel courses, each one could be of military assistance as a supply line for battles in the next river-trench to the west.

"The defensive value of the Dneiper, Don or Volga and their innumerable tributaries begins to diminish about November, however, when occasional freezes fill them with ice. River traffic slows down then to a full stop, and when the water is completely frozen sleds travel as conveniently as boats did in the summertime. But a frozen river is not such an obstacle to an invader, who actually finds progress easier when marshy shores are solid with ice."

Equal Drink Rights For Enlisted Men In Iceland Asked

Milwaukee, Sept. 5 (AP).—Representative Thaddeus F. Wasielewski (Democrat), Wisconsin, wrote the Secretaries of War and the Navy today he had been informed enlisted men were barred by military orders from the only hotel in Reykjavik, Iceland, which is licensed to sell liquors and beer.

Wasielewski said the place was being monopolized by officers, according to information available to him. He protested that the discrimination was a "most flagrant violation of our American principles."

"Enlisted men who are denied the privilege of frequenting this hotel must seek their refreshments at the water front roadhouses, where bootleg liquors and near beer, spiked with raw bootleg alcohol, are being dispensed in a manner reminiscent of our prohibition era," he wrote.

G. W. U. Has Campus in Center of City

By Robert Rand
Post Staff Writer

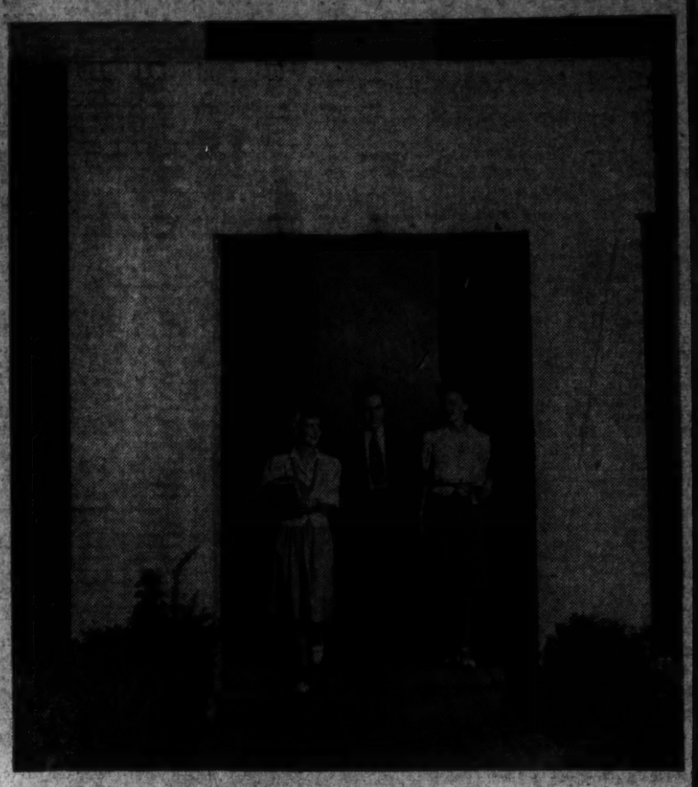
"Say, we started cooperating with the national defense effort 60 years ago, before Adolf Schickelgruber ever knew there was a world," Dr. Elmer L. Kayser, dean of university students at George Washington University, said yesterday.

"The university was a pioneer in providing collegiate instruction for employed students. When we moved the campus downtown 60 years ago, we did something.

"In fact," said Dr. Kayser, "just by having a Class A university in the center of the city, available to all who are interested in getting an education, whether they work or not, we are doing national defense a great service. Our entire facilities are open to anyone who takes one or more courses."

The facilities which Dr. Kayser spoke of include six million dollars worth of buildings, grounds and equipment, and there are 400 faculty members. All this educational wealth is shared by 12 divisions of the university—the Junior College, the Columbian College, the Senior College of Letters and Science, the Graduate Council, the School of Medicine, the Law School, the School of Engineering, the School of Pharmacy, the School of Education, the School of Government, the Inter-American Center, the Summer Sessions and the Division of University Students.

Dean Kayser is in charge of the latter division. If you want to take some courses just for the sake of education, and you're not interested in a degree, he's the man to see. And if you are interested in a degree, you can later get credit for a certain number of these courses, or you can enter one of the other divisions.



ON THE CAMPUS—Helen Duckson, Don Hunt, Dulcie Teeter

But George Washington's 8000 students don't study all the time. Such things as football, smokers, dances, fraternities and sororities, clubs, debates, and various athletic events share a major place in campus life. "You've got to have some fun, too," says Prof. Kayser.

Tuition at the university is at the rate of $8 a semester hour. A full course of 16 hours requires a tuition of $128 a semester. George Washington, however, has hundreds of part-time students who take from six hours ($48) to 12 hours ($96) of work. There is, in addition, a compulsory $8 university fee which covers admission to athletic events, subscription to the school paper and hospitalization.

The university, opening officially September 17, has two new successes up its sleeve this year. First, it has added 13 new classes to its already 15 defense training courses. These courses, giving various kinds of technical education, are sponsored and paid for by the Government. Most of the courses last 15 weeks, and for these classes there is no tuition charge.

Second innovation is a beautiful auditorium, expected to be completed early next year. It will seat more than 1550 persons.

"In other words," said Prof. Kayser, "we're really going to town."

A Famous Film Maker Moves Up to Big Time

Pare Lorentz Signs Three-Way RKO Contract; The Selectees' Shows Come Off the Line; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

IT WAS BOUND TO HAPPEN sooner or later. Anyone who has produced such skillfully contrived independent short-reelers, such an impressive list of governmental documentaries and betrayed so marked an ability to achieve important results without benefit of expansive studio facilities, inevitably must find himself signed, eventually, at the bottom of a big-time contract.

PARE LORENTZ

So it is not surprising that Pare Lorentz, whose striking film, "The Fight for Life," created a world-wide sensation when released a year ago, has been articled by Joseph I. Breen, vice president in charge of production, to write, produce and direct feature pictures for RKO-Radio.

The first man to make factual films of America, Lorentz first attracted national attention with his "Plow That Broke the Plains" and "The River." Prior to entering this field, he was motion picture editor of Judge, the New York Evening Journal, Vanity Fair, Town and Country, U. S. Camera and McCall's Magazine. His essays and fiction have appeared in Harper's, Scribner's, Forum, The New Yorker, Story and other national magazines. He is also the author of several books, his latest, "What We Are About to Defend," being a textbook symposium for high school use.

Lorentz is a native of Clarksburg, W. Va. His first production for RKO-Radio is nebulously described as "an epic of modern American life," which ought to afford sufficient scope to please anybody.

When Ed Wynn's "Boys and Girls Together" opens in the National Monday night, one of the dancing roles of importance will be filled by Ronnie Cunningham. Miss Cunningham was born in Washington and began the study of dancing at the slightly wobbly age of 4. She studied with Madeline Smithson Hodgson and later attended the ballet school of Theodore Bekefi. Combining dancing skill with an inquisitive mind, she was awarded a four-year scholarship at the Immaculate Conception Academy. Her studies completed in Washington, Ronnie hied her over to New York, which seems to have been a good idea. She won a minor part in "I Married an Angel," with Zorina, a specialty spot in "Higher and Higher" and a solo part in "Panama Hattie." And now the Wynn business. The daughter of A. J. Cunningham, a Government worker, the young dancer lives at 4819 Kansas Avenue, when not on tour.

Stars Coming Over Horizon

Laying further emphasis on the "happiest movie season" slogan, Loew's Capitol Theater is heavily underlining the stage notables who are coming along to headline impending stage bills. Those old war horses of the varieties, Smith and Dale, this week are making it doubly incomprehensible that two-a-day vaudeville ever should have passed out. In their wake will come Will Bradley and His Orchestra, Jackie Heller, the Hartmans, with their incomparable dance travesties; Hal LeRoy, Sheila Barrett and Emile Boreo, the old "Wooden Soldier" himself, from the memorable "Chauve Souris." Local favorites, every last one of them.

Comes a surprising press dispatch from Gloucester, Mass. Stirling Hayden, the 25-year-old Gloucester skipper, who made good in Hollywood practically overnight, has announced that he is through with pictures because he wants to live his own life. To prove it, he grimly tossed his California license plates off the deep end of the dock and replaced them with Massachusetts tags. The 6-foot-4 Hayden, once reported shipwrecked with Madeleine Carroll, with whom he appeared in two pictures, told a reporter he had abandoned the films simply because he did not wish to be tied to Hollywood. No mention of Miss Carroll in this connection, Mr. Hayden being a smart young man.

Ambiguity in the original announcement caused this department to place the first Washington showings of a brace of English-made thrillers on the screen at Sidney Lust's Bethesda Theater a week ahead of the event. It is this Sunday, Monday and Tuesday that the late Edgar Wallace's "The Terror" and "The Mystery of Room 13" will go on view out yonder.

Just to Say "We Told You So"

Although unable to wangle the time to see it, every report coming to this desk is to the effect that Harry Anger's "Marching Along" unit is exactly what the Army training camps would have ordered, had they been on the inside of the District Defense Council. Almost 1000 money-on-the-barrelhead patrons cheered the show at the Wednesday night public preview in Central High School Auditorium. I told you that was the kind of job Harry would turn out.

With "Marching Along" living up to its title, Phil Hayden will be breaking out his "Jest-Rite Revue" at Central next Wednesday night at 8:30. Phil is whipping together a variety program of singing and dancing by carefully selected glamour girls, comedy, magic, roping tricks by real cowboys and many other features. Tickets only two-bits a copy, on sale at the D. D. C. Information Booth, on Post Square; Room 500, District Building; the A. A. A., Force School and offices of the Community Center and Playgrounds Department, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue. Prpceeds go to provide costumes, props, etc., for the units organized for training camp entertainment.

Nothing to Do With Boosting Any Waning Resort

THE ICE-CAPADETTES are merely proving that they can have fun on the water, even before it is frozen. Earle

Of romance, boy-meets-girl, love interest and the other usual concomitants of fictional drama, not a trace. Well, hardly any. But of fighting planes, simulating their appointed function, and the scientific procedures by which the Medical Corps of Navy aviation keeps its fliers in the air at whatever altitude—and the higher the better—a very great deal.

Which is to say that "Dive Bomber," opening its second week on the Earle screen today, is a technically interesting and informative film that has the courage to abandon the customary ingredients of "drama" and devote itself to an aspect of national service heretofore left untouched by the cinema. Its impressiveness is multiplied by an especially deft use of Technicolor photography.

In roles that depart a little from their accustomed grooves, Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy, Regis Toomey and Robert Armstrong carry the brunt of the factual story. Alexis Smith and Dennie Moore are the only feminine players of importance in the cast and their presence is not vital.

Harry Anger's brief but excellent stage revue continues with the major feature.

RKO-Keith's

Orson Welles' searching biography of a lonely, bewildered man, "Citizen Kane," yesterday began its second week of a return, popular-price engagement, at RKO-Keith's.

The widely discussed film bears the indelible mark of one individual, Author-Producer-Actor Welles, just as thoroughly as it probes the personality of the unhappy millionaire publisher Welles calls Charles Foster Kane. How he got his money and spent it, why he built his newspaper empire and his Chicago Opera House, what lost him his friends and his wives are all revealed by unique technical devices. Perspectives are realistically achieved; sound seems to come from all parts of a room rather than one spot where a microphone might be. The story line is developed on a fascinating system of clews and suggestions.

Metropolitan

Outstanding as "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" is of itself, perhaps the film's most astounding quality is its way with audiences. After a run which previous commitments precluded extending at the Earle, this amusing, provocative comedy reopened yesterday morning at the Metropolitan.

One calls "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" a comedy with some misgivings. It is far more than a comedy; yet to call it fantasy would send shudders down the spines of those brave folk who can bear anything but fantasy. So consider this Robert Montgomery vehicle as intelligent film fare and the curious situation of a man fate has decreed must one day be world's champion heavyweight and must not die until he's in his seventies.

Montgomery's humor—plus a superb use of accent—makes the fighter a memorable fellow. James Gleason, Claude Rains, Edward E. Horton, Evelyn Keyes, Kay Johnson, John Emery and Halliwell Hobbes are others in the cast of this "must" picture.

LEONARD LYONS

New York, Sept. 5.

SOCIAL NOTES: In the Stork Club, at 3 a. m. yesterday, John Gunther and Jimmy Young decided to telephone Premier Konoye, in Tokyo, and ask him whether the rumored meeting with President Roosevelt was to be in the Atlantic Ocean or the Pacific, on a Japanese vessel or an American warship. The overseas operator was unable to put the call through . . . Young, the author of "Behind the Rising Sun," who was jailed in Tokyo last year, then revealed this story—of the day the Panay was bombed. Through the city spread the rumor that Roosevelt planned to telephone the Emperor, and register direct protest . . . The Emperor never has answered a phone call, for "God cannot be disturbed." The dilemma—whether a President should be snubbed or an inviolate rule suspended—was averted in a simple, forthright way. The Japanese diplomats merely ripped out every telephone in the palace of the Emperor of Japan.

LOCAL NEWS: Robert E. Sherwood is expected in London this week . . . Al Smith's trips to Washington have proved efficacious. Sections of the Treasury Department now are being housed in two entire floors at the Empire State Building . . . W. Averell Harriman took his new camera with him to Europe—and photographed Churchill, Beaverbrook, Bevin and then Egypt and the Gold Coast. But the pictures were all blanks . . . Ambassador Steinhardt, who was to have returned from Russia this week, has sent word that he will remain in Moscow indefinitely

CRIME DEPT.: Jay Allen, the correspondent who was held prisoner by the Nazis in Paris, was examined by the Gestapo a few minutes after his arrest . . . A short, thin officer came to Allen's cell, locked the door, and asked a series of questions without obtaining satisfactory response . . . "I'll get you to answer," the Nazi threatened. "We have ways and means of doing it. I know all about the methods used by your own New York police to get information. And I'll get it out of you, just as if I were a New York policeman" . . . "Don't be silly," said the 6 foot 200-pound Allen, to the Nazi, who then fled, "any New York policeman would know better than to lock himself in a room with a guy twice his size."

TRAVEL DEPT.: Douglas Fairbanks, jr., who is being directed by Gregory Ratoff in "The Corsican Brothers," announced that the radio had just reported that the Nazis claimed a 200-mile advance in the Ukraine . . . "In Russia," shrugged the Russian-born Ratoff, "200 miles is as nothing" . . . Later, that afternoon, Fairbanks reported: "The Germans say they have only 65 miles to go before they reach Leningrad" . . . "65 miles?" Ratoff shrugged. "Believe me, in that country 65 miles is a very long distance."

POLITICS DEPARTMENT: Billy Rose and Clifford Odets live on the same block, in swanky Beekman Place. Last week Rose phoned Odets, invited him to go to the seashore, and they arranged to meet in front of Billy's house . . . The producer completed his chores, and then went downstairs—where he waited, and waited, until someone asked him: "What are you doing, Billy?" . . . Rose replied: "I'm Waiting for Lefty, on Beekman Place."

Even Horses Fall for Films!

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 5. Any sane person, about to buy a horse, would want one that could stand on its own four legs, but in Hollywood the highest priced ones are those that fall down if you look at them crooked! These are the nags, trained for Westerns' battle scenes, etc., who bite the dust (for fifty bucks a bite) roll over and play dead at the twitch of a bridle.

WALT DISNEY

In the old days, horses used to be tripped with invisible wires or brought down by brush-covered holes dug along the route, but those practices have long since been outlawed by the Humane Society, which supervises with the utmost care all pictures in which animals are employed. So in those blood curdling shots you'll see in "They Died With Their Boots On" don't get a "mad" on with Warners. The only horses you'll see taking any falls are those equine acrobats specially trained for it.

The current Walt Disney studio shut-down, fortunately, in no way affects their production of animated shorts for defense training. These shorts, which Disney has offered to make at cost for our own Government, have now been commissioned for Canada also, through John Grierson, chief of the National Film Board. A Canadian noncommissioned officer has been attached to the studio to assist the special group of artists and technicians who are "carrying on" despite the unfortunate situation there.

Kaaren Verne, who took that slap on the right cheek (and no fake about it) from Martin Kosleck in "Underground," has to turn the other cheek in "All Through the Night." Humphrey Bogart will give her a nasty backhand, but Kaaren's doctor stipulated the left jaw, as the "jaw-hinge" bruise sustained in the last beating is not completely healed. Kosleck showered Kaaren with orchids during "Underground" in an effort to express his contrition, and Bogey's planning something handsome along the same lines, so Kaaren says "My only regret is that I have but two jaws to give for my art!"

Oscar Levant is combining his concert tour this year with lectures on Hollywood. If they're as amusing as that book of his, I'll bet he never gets near a piano . . . Rockefeller Center's dignified penguins are to be the background for the new Laurel and Hardy picture . . . (if the dignified Rockefellers approve) . . . Jimmy Cagney has been gifted with an identication disc by the RCAF staff officers in Ontario. It's engraved "James Cagney, Captain of the Clouds" and you couldn't pry it off him with a chisel!

The Noah Berrys, senior and junior, united in pictures for the first time in ten years, in "Overland Mail," were thrilled pink until they discovered they don't appear in a single scene together . . . Jimmy Stewart says the two subjects about which soldiers ask him most questions are trick photography and Hedy Lamarr. Come on, Jimmy, what do you tell them?

Carl Esmond almost scared the wits out of the "Sundown" company on their final take. Action called for Carl to be shot and fall head first into a pool. Scene was perfect on first take and Director Henry Hathaway called "cut" but nothing happened. Again he yelled "cut" but there were Carl's two feet sticking up, motionless from the pool. The entire company as one man galvanized into action and hauled the sputtering corpse out. "Well, Heck!" said Carl, "How could I hear with my head 2 feet under water?"

Kay Kyser was ribbed so much about his Shakesperean sequence in "Playmates" that he grew extremely sensitive. So to make him feel at ease the morning he actually reported for work, everyone on the set, from the diminutive doorman to 230-pound David Butler, dolled up in Elizabethan costumes, complete with Kyserean spectacles.

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Three Strikes, But Not Out

Hollywood, Sept. 5 (INS).—If ever a girl had three strikes on her career before she really got started it is Gene Tierney.

GENE TIERNEY

First, there was that long, serious trouble with her eyes. Then those amateur critics from Harvard nominated her as "the girl least likely to succeed." All this, followed by family squabbles when she married Count Oleg Cassini, caused the little Tierney girl sleepless nights. Now it seems her troubles are behind her, for just before the Labor Day weekend, Twentieth handed Gene a nonstop contract that carries her right up to 1943, carrying the provision that she will eventually be starred.

The next Tierney assignment is "Son of Fury," with Ty Power and Maureen O'Hara, the girls' roles being of equal importance.

I am very sure "Tails for Manhattan," the movies Boris Morros is getting ready to film, will be an innovation. Remember the story deals with an evening suit and each episode is one complete picture. There are seven separate movies in all and Morros has signed three of the biggest names in the picture for his first three. The first will be made by Charles Boyer, the second by Joel McCrea and the third by Edward G. Robinson. Directors of corresponding importance are to be selected.

The perennial "Desert Song," which comes up for consideration just as regularly as comes the dawn, is again the subject of conversation on the Warner lot. This time Warners are honestly going to do it with Dennis Morgan as "the Red Shadow" and with all the beautiful Sigmund Romberg music—only this time the Red Shadow's adventures will be different. Robert Buckner has written a story in which the Red Shadow's activities take place in Dakar, Africa, with the De Gaulle French forces as opposed to the Germans as the plot idea.

'Favorite Painting' Party Is Given by the Parrys

Guests Partake of Beer and Stew By Way of Cushioning the 'Artistic Shock'

Something new in picnic supper entertainment—a "come as your favorite painting" party—took place across the river last night when Ed and Ellen Parry were hosts at their McLean, Va., residence.

Wearing an artist's smock and a huge velvet beret, Mrs. Parry greeted her 120 guests who had come for supper at 7—to be followed by art. Dressed in casual sports clothes, guests arrived with all manner of costumes and props tucked under their arms, ready for the fun.

A huge picture frame, with curtains arranged on a drawstring, had been set up on the veranda and here the guests posed. The invitations read: "The cricket Hill Art Gallery. Ed and Ellen Parry, directors, announce a special living reproduction of famous paintings." It went on to promise judges who were "cornyseers," picked because they would "call 'em as they saw 'em."

The hosts also promised to provide an antidote—beer and stew—against artistic shock. Cricket Hill, which is situated on the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Downs, is about a quarter of a mile from the Potomac. Last night gay lanterns lit up the garden, where about 10 long tables had been set up. Barrels of beer were strategically placed about the lawn as were huge urns of steaming hot stew.

Thurman Arnolds Attend Party

Among those enjoying the fun were Mr. and Mrs. Donald Downs, the Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Thurman Arnold, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Howze, Mr. and Mrs. H. Lee Boatwright 3d, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lord, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Scrivener, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Munsters, Mr. and Mrs. Garland Pollard and Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Fulton.

Virtually every attic in Washington had been scoured for suitable costumes for the occasion. Although the invitations had said that paintings of the "serious, modernistic or just plain humorous style" would be reproduced, there was a definite Dali trend. The modernists being very much in the majority, many pictures of Grant Woods' were done in a most ludicrous fashion.

Dali Influence Was Apparent

Amid cheers and jeers, the hardy souls took their turns before the enormous 10-by-10 foot frame to display their skill at imitating pictures. The judges, of course, had a slightly difficult job, but the selections seemed to meet with approval—and guests went back to their beer.

Guests who were, for the most part, members of the young married set, were a congenial mixture of Virginians and Washingtonians. Seen here and there: The Jack Wilkinses, enjoying the fun no end . . . The "Tommy" Tompkins, chatting with an animated group . . . Mr. and Mrs. Mark Merrill . . . Mrs. Joseph Horgan, whose doctor-husband was unable to attend . . . Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Littlepage . . . the Thacher Winslows, over from their Virginia home . . . Mr. and Mrs. Richard Shands . . . Mr. and Mrs. Beverly Coleman . . . Demure Look for College Prom Trotters

A touch of early America would be added to any college prom by this quaint beruffled dress. It is an answer to the problem raised in today's Fashion Forum by the girls who cannot have many evening dresses for college. It features the new covered-up look for evening, now more sought after than the bare, off-shoulder effect. It is made of rich faille weave rayon by Eastman. Pannier-like lace adds an elegant note to the youthful flattery of the gown. Underneath the full spreading skirt lies an old-time crinoline petticoat. Though not to decollete, the dress is formal enough for the most regal reception or campus ball

College Formals

FROM FASHION magazines and elaborately laid out college wardrobe guides, a girl is made to believe she needs about a dozen formal evening dresses to carry her through the year. The question has been asked as to what would be the minimum number of evening dresses necessary.

For the first semester of college, advisers advocate at least one formal evening dress. Though heart and V-neck decolletages are popular formal styles, bare shoulders are in the minority. The covered-up effect at the shoulders with long or short sleeves is more in favor. Formality is achieved by the fabrics used, such as rayon taffetas, jacquard rayon satins, rayon faille taffetas, rayon nets and some velveteens.

At least one informal long dress is advised for afternoon and informal affairs. The wise girl will buy a dress with a separate skirt that can be changed at intervals with a bright new blouse or an evening sweater. Velveteen is an especially smart fabric this season that would stand as a separate skirt. Wear it with a tiny bolero over a white crepe blouse, a fitted wool plaid jacket, a pale wool sweater or a self jacket.

Fashions for 'Fellows'

DIGRESSING a bit from feminine fashions, the fashion editor answers a query from a mother concerning her young son's attire. The son, a senior in high school, purchased a pecan-color Shetland wool three-button jacket. Upon asking for harmonizing plaid trousers, it was suggested that olive green covert cloth would be a better combination this year.

The mother, having recently seen plaid trousers featured for young fellows in a leading men's magazine, asks if plaids are going to be worn this winter.

According to P. R. Schultz, buyer for a smart men's clothing store, the mix-match idea in fellows clothes is more important this year than in previous years. As he states, however, "Plaids are not quite as popular this season as they were a few years ago. Covert cloth in natural brown, heather, blue and cavalry colors, with wide wale diagonal twill weave is newer this year."

Mr. Schultz made an exception in the case of the young high school student, however. "The subdued Glen plaids can't be beat for the young fellow—especially if he wants to make a play for the girls," he said jokingly. He added that plaids are livelier than covert cloth and that the newer designs are not too bold. A medium tan Glen plaid was suggested to go with the pecan color jacket. As a guide for carrying out the mix-match scheme, Mr. Schultz said that fellows like the dark tweeds and plain coats combined with plain, light-colored trousers or vice versa.

Pompadour Hats

ANOTHER query comes from a young girl who wants to know if pompadour hats are going to be good this year, since she wore them all last year.

With all the swashbuckling, peaked bonnets on the hat horizon, it looks as if the pompadour style is taking a backslide. But it is still just as popular as ever—merely disguised a bit. This season many hats that are really pompadour styles are worn with the hairline smooth above the forehead, thus achieving a different effect. With others, attention is drawn to the cover-up draping about the neck and back interest. In the large draped brim hat that sits back off the head, the conventional pompadour hat and hair style has been preserved, however.

Autumn Dish

BRIGHT autumn leaves and oven meals usually make their appearance about the same time. That's because with nippy weather our appetites become more active, and the cook looks around for substantial main dishes.

A roast loin of pork, stuffed with rice made zestful with seasonings, and a sauce made of raisins, ripe olives and tomatoes, is an oven-cooked dish that will handsomely reward for the time used to make it. Make it this way:

Spanish Roast Loin of Pork

Saute 1-3 cup minced green pepper, 1-3 cup minced onion and 1 clove minced garlic in ¼ cup salad oil until tender. Add 2 8-oz. cans tomato sauce and 1 cup hot water and bring to boil. Combine 1 tablespoon chili powder, ¼ cup firmly packed brown sugar, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ cup water; add ⅛ cup sliced ripe olives and 1 cup seedless raisins to sauce and boil for 4 minutes. Add ¼ cup of sauce to 2 cups cooked rice.

Buy a 3-pound loin of pork and have butcher loosen meat from rib bone just enough to form a pocket. Stuff with rice mixture. Cook covered in Dutch oven in moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 1 hour. Pour the remaining raisin sauce over roast and continue cooking, uncovered, for 1 hour. Serves 6.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl, 15, Scheduled to Make Speech of Welcome To Distinguished School Visitor, Flees Platform In Tears, Because of Shame of Size of Her Nose

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have worried so much about my problem that I am in a state of utter confusion. So now I am coming to you for help, hoping you can suggest a sensible solution. I am a girl 15 years old. I have dark brown, naturally wavy hair; dark eyes, a medium-sized mouth and a clear olive skin. But one feature ruins the picture terribly. It is my long nose.

Because I always think people are looking at my nose, I feel shy and self-conscious. One day at school, I was supposed to make a speech in honor of a distinguished visitor. When I took the floor, I thought of my nose and my face turned red. As I started to speak, all I could say was, "uh-uh-uh." Feeling very embarrassed, I went to my seat and cried it out. Later, the teacher told me that if I did not gain self-confidence, I would lose my place on the honor roll. Well, how can I gain self-confidence when I have such a terrible defect?

Since my parents are rather old fashioned, I am afraid to tell them how I feel about my nose. They would probably laugh at me. When I say they are old fashioned, I mean that they think I should not associate with boys until I am 20 years old. However, even if they didn't feel that way, I suppose it would be no use; because a boy doesn't like to go out with a girl who has a large nose. But at least I would be happier.

Do you think plastic surgery would cost much? Could it be paid off monthly? Do you think I should feel as I do about this defect? I suppose I am not the sophisticated type. Please help me; and it is important that I hear from you before September 6, if possible. UNHAPPY GIRL.

Typical Manifestation Of Sensitive Adolescent

DEAR UNHAPPY: Your worry about your nose is a typical symptom of adolescent hypersensitive self-awareness. Few youngsters go through that gangling period of transition from childhood to adulthood without agonizing unwarrantedly over supposedly hideous defects in appearance. Commonplace cause of mortification to teen-age girls are freckles; or a growth of downy hair on cheeks and upper lip; or crooked, protruding or widely spaced teeth; or (as in your case) a prominent nose; or a notion that their hands or feet are disproportionately large, their legs disfiguringly bowed, or their bodies too tall and lanky.

Almost invariably, that kind of bitter discontent with one's image in the mirror is concomitant with a high degree of intelligence;—as witness, in your case, the fact that you are on the honor roll at school, and were chosen "to make a speech in honor of a distinguished visitor." It should hardly be necessary to point out that your teachers and/or classmates must consider you passably attractive in appearance, or they would not have given you the spotlight on that occasion. It stands to reason they wouldn't delegate a freak to speak for the student body. I daresay they have never noticed your nose at all; although they may have wondered, at times, why you haven't more poise.

Your principal handicap is not your nose, but your attitude toward your nose. You are suffering primarily from mis-use of intelligence—diverting it into devastatingly self-critical rather than creatively self-improving channels. This is an age of self-made beauties; and beauty, for most girls nowadays, begins with the realization that they could be much better looking than they are. The more intelligent girls, having candidly taken stock of their appearance and being artistically displeased with the happenstance effect, get busy minimizing their defects by accenting their fine points—until the beholder sees only the latter and grades them accordingly.

You have a wealth of beauty assets (sufficient to offset any imperfect features) in your naturally wavy dark hair, dark eyes and clear olive skin. And even your nose (which you deplore today) may be remarked as one of your most attractive facial features in future years,—when your poise, personality and bodily stature have (as it were) caught up with it. After all, a large nose, well shaped, is a traditional mark of "good blood,"—lending the distinguished implication of "bone-bred" intelligence, sensitivity and generosity to a countenance.

I gather that no one has ever commented upon the size of your nose; that you alone are hypnotized by it. Therefore, my advice to you is to dismiss the idea of plastic surgery and stop worrying about your nose. Forget about it—not by concentrating upon "forgetting," but by becoming so engrossed in the business of "playing up" your eyes, hair and coloring that the original incentive to use those assets for all they are worth completely fades from mind. With your intelligence, plus the physical assets listed above, you have the possibilities of beautifully expressive eyes, smile and voice—not to mention superb complexion and glorious hair. And that—believe me!—is much more than many girls have, who contrive to make a "knock-out" appearance.

Next time you confront a mirror, try looking past your nose at the whole person reflected there. (Because I am sure this is a case of refusing to see beyond your nose!) Scan your image with the artist's eye,—which means taking a far-sighted slant on the total picture, so as to capture it in perspective. Then you will be seeing yourself as others see you. And make every session with the looking glass an experiment in self improvement,—not a dispirited "convergence exercise," of the kind in which both eyes are focussed on the end of the nose!

Study the effects of new hairdos, new ways of applying cosmetics, new styles and color-combinations in dress—all thoughtfully observed in relation to the full figure and total personality. Put successful formulas into immediate practice, and you will find yourself growing, day by day in every way, a more pleasing picture than before; and happily oblivious of the size of your probably quite aristocratic nose.

Children's Diets Need Revising, Dairymen Say

If for no other reason than to improve their teeth, the diets of young Americans of school age need revising, the National Dairy Council declares. Army examinations have proved that American youngsters need more calcium to build strong bones and teeth.

Calcium is the element from which bones and teeth are chiefly composed and the bones show the first effects of an insufficient supply of calcium and phosphorus.

Few people realize the complicated character of the processes governing the utilization of calcium by the body. In wartime intake of the essential substances must be emphasized and that of calcium particularly.

Dr. Vernon Fisk of the University of Toronto told the American Association of Orthodontists at their recent convention that "diet is important if strong teeth resist the decay that leads to growth irregularities."

The Tall Gain Poise, Confidence In New Club for Six-Footers

By Ida Jean Kain

OURS IS a great country for clubs with unique membership requirements. In Manhattan, one of the newest is the Stratoliners Club. To belong the girls must be 6 feet or over without shoes, and somewhere between 18 and 35 years old. The masculine members must be at least 6 feet 2, and between 20 and 35. The sky is the limit on height. The tallest member to date is a lad who towers 6 feet 6.

The club is only four months old and already has 50 tall members. They are very strict about maintaining their high standards and no little girl of five feet eleven can get by in high heels.

The main purpose of the club is to get together and have fun. There are parties each week. In summer, they swim, take boat rides and trips, and go hiking. In winter, they roller skate, ice skate, and go for sleigh rides. They also bowl and get in lots of dancing. How they enjoy dancing together! The girls say it is wonderful not to have to go into a half crouch, all bowed out behind, to dance with some short fellow. And the men say it's no pain in the neck to dance with tall girls.

The organizer and president, Gladys Brody, who is an even 6 feet, tells me the club has worked miracles of selfconfidence with its members. They all have more poise and better postures. For the first time in their lives, they are holding their heads up. Belonging to a tall group encourages them to be natural and they are beginning to believe that it is a distinct advantage to be taller than average.

The girls wear high heels, their favorite gay colors, and perky hats instead of trying to camouflage their height with somber colors and conservative styles. They trade shopping tips on where to buy clothes or have them made and which styles are most flattering. The men like to get together and talk about shoes and long-sleeved shirts. All in all, the club is considered a great success.

I get so many letters from tall girls who feel that their height is blighting their lives that I wanted to tell you about this club. Why not send out a call for the tall people in your community? You can set your own height requirements and age limits. The way to get started is to round up two or three tall people, organize, and send the announcement to your newspaper.

Taft Offers Plan for Unity To Roosevelt

By International News Service

Charging that "President Roosevelt is America's chief apostle of disunity," Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, in a Nation-wide broadcast last night outlined an eight-point program of his own which he urged the Administration to adopt.

Senator Taft asserted that "unity to Mr. Roosevelt means agreeing with his opinions," and added that the President's pledge af the Churchill sea parley "to destroy Nazi tyranny" definitely committed this country to active participation in the war.

"If Mr. Roosevelt is interested in securing national unity, as he says he is, then he must accept the views held by the majority or else persuade the people to accept his own views," continued Taft.

Calls for Confidence

"Only through unified opinion can democratic America pursue its course in time of war, and I suggest if our President wants that that he adopt this program:

"1. Permit the Administration to take the country into its confidence; state clearly what policy he wants America to adopt, and treat us like Americans—not like Russian peasants.

"2. Encourage the press to perform its traditional job of informing the public and investigating governmental abuses.

"3. Let national defense legislation deal with that purpose only; not give it powers that may fulfill desired New Deal economic objectives.

"4. Let Mr. Roosevelt turn from followers of the Hopkins, Henderson and Ickes' ideologies (in whom Congress and the public have no confidence) to able administrators.

Cites Election Pledge

"5. Let Mr. Roosevelt consult those who disagree with him instead of denouncing them.

"6. Let Mr. Roosevelt publicly assure us that he has made no secret commitments with Churchill or Stalin, and to submit any proposed understanding immediately to Congress for approval.

"7. Let Mr. Roosevelt again restate his pre-election pledge that no American boys will be sent to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas.

"8. Let Mr. Roosevelt unite the Nation on a policy to which both political parties agree; an impregnable defense, and all material aid to England—short of war—unless this country is attacked."

Increases Declared Necessary in Face Of Rising Costs; Convention Adjourns

By Jerry Kluttz
Editor of Federal Diary

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 5.—National Federation of Federal Employes, largest and most influential "white collar" union of Government workers, will work for higher employe salaries to meet the rising living costs. In a resolution approved unanimously just before adjournment of the fourteenth biennial convention, the more than 200 delegates instructed national officers to seek salary adjustments or bonuses commensurate with the rise in living costs.

KLUTTZ

The union will have the support of Chairman Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Commission, who told the convention that higher Federal salaries are inevitable unless prices are controlled. Neither Ramspeck nor the union would say what percentage of increase would be asked. During World War I, low-paid Federal employes were "bonuses" of up to 20 per cent of their annual salaries.

The National defense program was given the support of the convention in a resolution that pleaded for "unity of purpose and the willingness to undergo sacrifice." Another resolution was approved which pledged the loyalty and complete devotion of the union to the Government and the cause of democracy.

Hear Blast Against Reds

Earlier today the convention heard a blast against the Communists by John J. Barrett, president of the United National Association of Postoffice Clerks, another independent employe union.

"We have in the Federal service," Barrett said, "some few who are not altogether satisfied with the liberties we now enjoy—they believe something better can be obtained.

"Some of these people," Barrett added, "are in the postal service and others are in the departments in Washington. I hope some day that these poor misguided persons will realize that they are Americans and will work for America."

The speaker dropped a hint that he believed that outside influence had something to do with the recent strike of public employes in Detroit.

Resolutions Adopted

The convention also approved resolutions seeking: To set up a "fair and workable plan" for advancement of employes from grade to grade; to improve the efficiency rating system, (a study by N. F. F. E. officers and the Civil Service Commission and the council of personnel administration of a new system also was ordered); further liberalization of the quarters, subsistence and laundry charges against employes working in Federal institutions, and establishment of a civil service court of appeals that would hear grievances other than efficiency ratings.

The union also will resist future Congressional efforts to deny employes civil service through the device of nailing riders on appropriation bills. Congress was asked to appropriate money to make effective the uniform promotion plan on October 1.

The so-called "Montana plan" that would reorganize the N. F. F. E. national office was voted down overwhelmingly. Montana delegates, who expressed dissatisfaction with the union's administration, said they realized the plan wouldn't be approved at this convention but they suggested that the delegates take it home "and two years from now you may see the light."

Denver will get the 1943 N. F. F. E. convention.

First Days of School—Last Days of Vacation

WORK BEGINS—PLAY CONTINUES—While youngsters in nearby Maryland and Virginia counties were beginning the school year yesterday, Washington children were getting the most possible enjoyment out of one of the few remaining days of their summer vacation. Steps Taken To Annex Va. Areas

President Approves Move to Recede Arlington Sections, McCarran Says

With the backing of President Roosevelt, Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Senate District Committee, last night had under way plans for annexing to the District all federally owned land and property in Arlington County, Va., that lies immediately adjacent to the Capital.

After a White House conference with the President, McCarran announced he has directed Renah F. Camalier, committee adviser, to start at once to study means by which the annexation may be accomplished by Congressional enactment.

McCarran declared he believed it will be possible for Congress to recapture and place within the jurisdiction of the District the new War Department Building to be constructed near Columbia Pike, the National Airport at Gravelly Point, Fort Myer, Arlington Cemetery and the old Arlington Experimental Farm.

Formerly Part of Capital

The properties, he pointed out, all lie within the original 10-mile square of the District and comprise a part of the Capital area which Congress ceded back to Virginia in 1846.

"I am absolutely convinced," McCarran declared, "that Congress had no more right to retrocede part of the District to Virginia than it has today to retrocede the present District to Maryland."

Only such Federal property in Arlington as is "contiguous" to the District is proposed to be retaken, he stated.

McCarran went to the White House to discuss with the President the Senator's proposal that all of the Virginia portion of the original District—a 30-square-mile area embracing all of Arlington County and part of Alexandria—be reclaimed by Congress.

The course finally agreed upon, he reported, was suggested by Mr. Roosevelt.

The Senator's interest in recapture of all or a part of Arlington County dates from the Senate fight several weeks ago over location in Virginia of a 35 million dollar War Department Building, a project the President later ordered cut in half. Yesterday McCarran reiterated to the President his prediction that the transfer of the War Department from the District would be followed by the removal of other departments until the District would no longer be the seat of Federal Government envisioned by the Constitution.

Asked what benefits would accrue to the District to offset the cost of providing police and fire protection and water and sewer facilities for the lands to be annexed, McCarran replied:

Sees Property Devaluation

"If vital departments of the Government are taken out of the District, the value of property here will diminish 60 per cent because the District will cease to be the seat of Government. By centralizing Government agencies in Washington you perpetuate the District as a commonwealth, so to speak. The Federal Government is the District's greatest asset."

The study to be made by Camalier, he added, will cover the prospective cost of annexation to District taxpayers.

McCarran contended that Virginia could have little objection to the proposal as, with one exception, all of the properties, being Federally owned, provide the State with no tax revenues.

The exception, he pointed out, is the airport where Virginia and the District are contesting the right to collect gasoline and other taxes. This dispute, the Senator said, may be ended by enactment of legislation, sponsored by him and Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, to put the airport, now partly in Virginia, entirely within the District.

Parents Say D. C. Triplets Yell Less Than a Lone Baby

THREE IN 10,000—Mrs. Vincent I. Sharpe with her triplets, Danny, Nancy and Billy, 6 months old tomorrow

Triplets, occuring once in every 10,000 births, prove sometimes (not often) that three babies can do less squalling of nights than one.

It's so with the triplets of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent I. Sharpe, 2037 Thirty-eighth Street Southeast. Six months old tomorrow, they are too young for a party, but open withal to congratulations.

The three of them sleep in a row. Mrs. Sharpe emphasized the word "sleep." They don't wake up the Sharpes of nights. They take their baths without squalling and they eat like bears.

The record shows how they east. William Vincent Sharpe weighed 2 pounds 15 ounces when born. Now he weighs 14 pounds 2 ounces; Nancy Lee Sharpe weighed 4 pounds 6 ounces when born, and now weighs 16 pounds. And Daniel Warren Sharpe began with 4 pounds 2 ounces and now carries 17 pounds.

Their formula for gaining is sleeping soundly and not squalling. Why they decided to do this, of course, no one knows. They're so cooperative, in fact, that the swift fingers of Mrs. Sharpe can adjust three pairs of diapers while the mother of a cross infant would be contending with one.

D. C. Traffic Kills Four In 40 Hours

Two Men Succumb To Motor Injuries; Washington Woman Dies in Canada Crash

D. C. traffic deaths this year.... 57
Total this date last year..... 48
District total last year..... 79

Four deaths in 40 hours were charged to Washington traffic yesterday as two more persons succumbed to injuries received when struck by motor vehicles.

Another Washingtonian, Mrs. Harriet Vaughan Rigdon, 64, former secretary-general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, died in Canada of injuries suffered in a traffic accident there.

Yesterday's deaths were:

Edwin K. Walker, 51, of 808 Nineteenth Street Northwest.

John J. Ragan, 65, 4903 Fifth Street Northwest.

Dies of Skull Fracture

Walker died at 7 p. m. in Emergency Hospital of a fractured skull suffered Tuesday when he was struck by a taxicab in the 1300 block of F Street Northwest. Police said he was crossing from one street car loading platform to another when the cab, driven by Alvin D. Stovall, 23, of Alexandria, Va., knocked him down.

Injured Thursday by a policeman's automobile as he crossed Constitution Avenue near Twenty-first Street Northwest, Ragan died at 3:58 a. m. yesterday at Emergency Hospital. Pvt. Edward M. Brown, 41, of 4008 Chesapeake Street Northwest, was driving the car. Ragan was crossing from curb to curb, not in a crosswalk, according to police records.

Ragan's death was the third in a 24-hour period. Other fatalities recorded since 3 a. m. Thursday were Walter W. Hook, 49, of R. F. D. 4, Anacostia, D. C., and John Butler, 11, Negro, of 50 Pierce Street Northwest.

Children Beside Her

Mrs. Rigdon, nationally prominent in activities of patriotic and veterans' organizations, was on a pleasure trip with friends when she was struck by an automobile in Chicoutimi, Quebec, on Monday night.

The accident necessitated amputation of her leg and she also suffered a broken arm and other injuries. A son and daughter were with her when she died.

A resident of the Kennedy-Warren Apartments, Mrs. Rigdon had served as national president of the Dames of the Loyal Legion of U. S. A., president of an organization of descendants of Union Civil War officers and chairman of the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense. She came to Washington from Indiana about 12 years ago.

Inquest Ordered

At an inquest into the death of Mrs. Myrtle Jordan, 53, of Huntington, W. Va., yesterday, Louis Vernon, 28, of 1407 Sixteenth Street Northeast, was ordered held for Police Court action under the Negligent Homicide Act.

He was said to be the driver of a taxicab which collided, August 20, with one in which Mrs. Jordan was riding, at Fourth Street and Washington Drive Northwest. Julius Bernstein, 30, of 2542 Thirteenth Street Northwest, who was driving the taxicab, was absolved of blame.

Mrs. Jordan suffered head and internal injuries and died at Casualty Hospital Monday morning.

At a second inquest Richard E. Robey, 21, of 522 Third Street Northeast, was exonerated. He was said to have been driver of an automobile which struck and killed Walter Hook at Benning Road and Minnesota Avenue early Thursday.

Policeman Injured

At 7:20 a. m. yesterday, motorcycle Policeman Russell Frey, 26, of the Traffic Division, suffered a possible fractured left knee and ankle when his machine collided with a pedestrian in the 1300 block New York Avenue Northeast. The pedestrian also was hurt.

Frey was escorting a contingent of Army trucks through the city when Carl Miller, 34, of Riverdale, Md., crossed the street through the line of vehicles, police reports said.

The motorcycle struck Miller, throwing both men to the street. Frey skidded close to 30 feet, dragging off the leather on his shoes and puttees. The policeman's ankle was scraped to the bone, doctors said.

Miller escaped with minor cuts on his legs, although the frame of the motorcycle was bent.

Motorcycle Hits Truck

Wendell Fagans, 25, of 60 Fifty-third Place Southeast, was seriously injured last night when his motorcycle collided with a truck at Forty-ninth and Grant Streets Northeast.

Taken to Casualty Hospital with a fractured skull and other injuries, he was still unconscious six hours later. Police listed Ira W. Lockey, jr., 21, of 440 Fiftieth Street Northeast, as driver of the truck.

Officials Deny Fire-Alarm Bill Is Monopolistic

District officials last night denied that the proposed fire-safety law for the District was drafted so as to give one manufacturer a monopoly on fire alarm installations in Washington buildings.

A charge that language of a bill, approved recently by a special District subcommittee, restricts competitive bidding on the equipment was made, it was learned yesterday, in letters from officials of fire underwriters to Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee.

"I feel that the bill, as it stands at present, would exclude all but one manufacturer of municipal fire alarms," declared H. E. C. Rainey, assistant manager of the Underwriters Association of the District.

Statement Requested

The letters to Randolph were in response to his request for an opinion from the Underwriters after several members of the committee, at a recent meeting, complained of the restrictive language of the bill.

The measure, result of long studies of means of modernizing the District's fire code following a series of disastrous fires several years ago, would require fire alarms with connections to fire headquarters to be installed in buildings five or more stories in height or having a single floor area of over 35,000 square feet.

Gen. Charles Kutz, the District's engineer commissioner, said he had heard reports of the allegedly restrictive language in the bill, but denied that the measure, drafted in the District Building, was phrased with "any monopoly in view."

The type of fire-alarm equipment used by the District, he said, has been employed here for many years, has been found entirely satisfactory and to change it now would require alterations in the alarm systems in many Government buildings.

Keech Dissents

Corportation Counsel Richmond B. Keech in whose office the measure was drafted, said he was unable to understand how the bill's language could be interpreted as creating a monopoly. He declared that the bill would permit installation of equipment of all alarm manufacturers, an opinion that was supported by statements of District fire officials.

To the fire underwriters, Randolph submitted a proposed amendment to the bill to permit installation of a manual fire alarm system "reporting through a private control station connected with the municipal fire alarm system."

Horato Bond, chief engineer for the National Fire Protective Association, Boston, declared that the reference in the bill "to a fire-alarm box connection to the municipal fire alarm box system is unfairly restrictive as it does not recognize a manual alarm box system which is connected through a private central station service."

"The latter," Bond declared, "is a perfectly acceptable means of accomplishing the desired end from a fire protection standpoint and we hope that you will see fit to accept this amendment."

Age Policy Will Cost 29th Its Commander

The Army's new retirement for age in grade policy, revealed by The Post a week ago and announced Thursday by Undersecretary of War Patterson, will cost the Twenty-ninth Division its commander and chief of staff.

It will retire the District's only two regimental commanders. And it will cost the Twenty-ninth one chief of staff section, two regimental commanders and several dozen battalion, company and battery commanders.

Practically all of those slated for retirement have had combat experience.

Promotions Practically Halted

Under the War Department policy, major generals commanding divisions must be retired at 62 years, brigadier generals at 60, colonels at 55, lieutenant colonels at 52, majors at 47, captains at 42, first lieutenants at 35 and second lieutenants at 30. These limits apply to reserve and National Guard officers with troops, who will serve out their year in Federal service unless retired earlier at their own request.

In addition, promotions for reserve officers have been practically halted.

If the regulation is carried out firmly, Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, commanding the Twenty-ninth, will be relieved in February. He is 62. The division's chief of staff, Col. John A. Cutchins, is 61. Lieut. Col. George Henderson, division intelligence officer, is 53; Col. Ralph Hutchins, commanding the 104th Quartermaster Regiment, is 61.

Col. Oehmann Is 59

Col. John W. Oehmann, commanding the District's 121st Engineers, is 59. The District's other regimental commander, Col. Walter W. Burns, commanding the 260th Coast Artillery, now at Fort Bliss, Tex., is 57. He recently was returned to his regiment after four months in hospital at Fort Bliss and at Walter Reed General Hospital here.

In all regiments of the Twenty-ninth Division are captains who have passed the age of 42, most of them fought in France in 1918. One infantry regiment will lose five. The 121st Engineers will lose six. The 260th Coast Artillery will be less acutely affected, except that its chaplain, Lieut. Col. Arlington A. McCallum, is 61.

Capt. Fowler To Head School For Detectives

Police Capt. John H. Fowler, commander of the Thirteenth Precinct and a ballistics expert, will be transferred to police headquarters Monday to begin organizing a school for detectives, Maj. Edward J. Kelly announced yesterday.

Former chief of the robbery squad and a graduate of Northwestern University's crime school, Fowler will have the title of "supervisor of the advanced school for policemen."

Maj. Kelly said that Capt. Fowler will retain his present rank "for the time being." It has been indicated at the District Building that the Commissioners are contemplating promoting Fowler to the rank of inspector.

Opening date of the new school has not been decided upon. It will function in addition to the present training school for rookie policemen, it was said.

"The Commissioners are anxious," Maj. Kelly asserted, "to establish a school for detectives here 'second to none in the country.'"

At the same time yesterday Maj. Kelly announced that Capt. Fowler and Lieut. John J. Agnew, newly appointed District boxing commissioner, will take over the job of investigating new appointees to the force.

This work previously has been done by Lieut. Earl F. Hartman, chief of the Special Investigations Squad. Hartman is now on leave and is expected to be transferred to a precinct when he returns to work.

All detective sergeants and precinct detectives "and all potential detectives" are scheduled to attend courses in the detective school, Maj. Kelly said.

"And when they have finished, I intend to make arrangements to send all captains, lieutenants, sergeants and privates who show detective ability through the school," he added.

Servicemen To Be Greeted At Four Dances

Four dances are on the agenda of entertainment awaiting service men expected to invade Washington tonight from surrounding military and naval establishments.

The Washington battalion of draftettes will provide partners for uniformed dancers at the Knights of Columbus Hall, 920 Tenth Street Northwest, 9 p. m.; the Convenant-First Presbyterian Church's fellowship house, 3653 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest; Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club, 1015 L Street Northwest, 8 p. m., and out-of-doors on E Street between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, 8 p. m.

The Covenant-First affair will be a dinner dance starting at 6 p. m., with transportation provided from the church, Connecticut Avenue and N Streets Northwest, to the fellowship house.

Other events scheduled include: Open house at National Capital Service Men's Club, 605 E Street Northwest, 7 o'clock tonight, with music, hostesses, games.

Dinner at Covenant-First Presbyterian Church tomorrow, open to men in uniform attending morning services there.

Open house, Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club, 4 p. m. tomorrow.

Permit Asked To Buy 200 Buses for D. C.

The Capital Transit Co. has made application to the Public Utilities Commission for permission to purchase 200 buses and 67 streamlined cars to be put in service next year. The aggregate cost of the new equipment is estimated at $3,400,000.

The buses and cars will be needed, it was said, because of demands resulting from the defense program.

E. D. Merrill, president of the company, said the cars and buses would represent the most modern equipment. With the new order, the company will have purchased 574 buses and 204 street cars since January 1, 1939.

"Our new street cars and buses represent an outlay of more than nine million dollars," Merrill said. "When all have been delivered, Capital Transit will have one of the largest fleets in the United States."

Couple Shot Leaving Tavern; Refuse to Talk

John C. Varn, 38, of Silver Spring, Md., and a woman companion who would not give police her name, were mysteriously shot in the left arm and left wrist, respectively, last night as they left a Georgia Avenue tavern.

Police learned the couple left the tavern at 7331 Georgia Avenue Northwest, about 11:45 p. m., and suffered the revolver shots as they entered their car at the curb. A passing motorist took them to Walter Reed Hospital.

Neither Varn nor the woman would discuss the incident.

Rain Breaks Up Concert at Aztec Garden Sponsored by Pan American Union

Guests of the Pan American Union were sent scurrying for shelter last evening when a sudden thundershower broke up the last outdoor concert of the summer in the Aztec Garden. Few of the auditors were prepared for rain, and the downpour came so quickly that many were drenched before they could crowd their way through the single door into the lower floor of the building. The more fortunate hurried up the flanking stairways into the Hall of the Americas and escaped with a light wetting.

Threatening clouds approached and there was a premonitory breeze while Capt. William F. Santelmann conducted the United States Marine Band in the opening number, the "Sancho Panza" overture by Alberto Williams, of Argentina. Apparently everybody hoped and expected that the storm would pass to the west, for there was no movement toward departure.

Carlos Ramirez, Colombian barytone with a rich and sonorous voice, got safely through his first group of songs by Lorenzo Barcelata, of Mexico, and Pedro Guttierez, of Venezuela. Scattered drops of rain began to fall as the band started selections from the opera, "Lo Schiavo," by Carlos Gomez, of Brazil, and then came the deluge that drove the musicians beneath the portico of the annex.

The majority of the guests lingered for a time in the hope that the concert would be continued indoors, but this was impracticable for several reasons. For one thing the crowd was larger than the Hall of the Americas would accommodate, and for another, some of the band instruments had been put temporarily out of commission.

For Senor Ramirez the interruption was only a part of his bad luck. He had flown to Washington on Thursday night from Chicago to be here for a rehearsal, and the plane was obliged by weather conditions to return to Pittsburgh. A second flight brought him to the Capital with only time for a short rehearsal in the late afternoon.

850-Unit Women's Dormitory Speeded for U. S. Employes

An 850-unit women's dormitory for single Government workers will go under immediate construction in the District it was announced last night by Defense Homes Corporation, a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The site, purchased from the French Government, fronts Meridian Hill Park, extending from Fifteenth to Sixteenth Streets on the north side of Euclid Street.

The building will be the second step in the completion of a 1000-unit project scheduled by the Defense Housing Coordinator. The first section of the project, a 250-unit building, is now being built at 2130 O Street Northwest. Construction of another women's dormitory with 150 units will soon be announced, the coordinator's office said last night, thus completing the 1000-unit program.

However, it was indicated that plans are now being made for additional projects in the District.

Rents are expected to be about $30. Each room will be supplied with maid service and linens.

Estranged Wife Hears Man Shoot Self After Phone Plea

A clerk at police headquarters last night picked up the telephone to get this distress call:

"Please go to 603 U Street Northwest to see if my husband is shot."

A scout car was dispatched and officers found the body of Norman Brown, a Postoffice clerk, limp over the second-floor stair railing. A revolver bullet wound appeared over his heart.

Then police, tracing that telephone call to Falls Church, talked again with the wife, Lillian Brown, who had separated from her husband.

"He called me twice this evening," she said. "The second time, about 8:15. He asked me if I was coming back to him. Then he said 'You'd better tell the office to get someone else to do my job tomorrow—I won't be there. I'm going to fire two shots—one into the wall, the second in my heart.'

'I heard the shots, then I heard him groan," Mrs. Brown said.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Grant Stopped by Schroeder at Forest Hills

Don McNeill, Riggs, Kovacs Also Advance

Helen Jacobs Heads Women's March Into Semifinal Round Of National Meet

By Bob Considine

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 5.—With the emphasis on California, as usual, the sixtieth annual national tennis championships reached the semi-final stage today, and the biggest upsets were the bizarre falls taken by Bryan (Bitsy) Grant on the sleazy grass courts.

Grant, after becoming the dark horse of the meet, fell before the rapier play of Ted Schroeder, of Glendale, Calif., 6—8, 6—1, 6—2, 6—3. Schroeder, who is one-half of the national doubles champion team, showed the most brilliant volleying and smashing of the tournament in blasting the durable little Atlantan. Grant won the first set by supernatural steadiness from the back court, spiced with a lot of somersaulting "gets" that brought yells of appreciation from the gallery of 5,000.

Riggs Blasts Parker

Schroeder was joined in the semi-finals by Bobby Riggs, the Los Angeles minister's son, who is hot after the title he yielded to Don McNeill last year. Riggs today beat Frankie Parker, who started his endless tramping around the tennis world ten years ago. Riggs won, 6—4, 6—3, 4—6, 6—2, in a match that was filled with long rallies, most of the crucial ones being ended by Riggs' vicious volleys at the net.

Still hale and hearty after a lot of years of ball-whacking, Helen Jacobs reached the semifinals in the women's auxiliary by outlasting chubby Dorothy Bundy, another California girl, 6—3, 11—9. It was one of those grim, tight-lipped tennis brawls which only the women seem able to produce. Miss Bundy, who hits harder than many of the men in the tournament, walloped the ball all over the place in the first set, and Helen outsteadied her rather easily.

"Jake" Breaks Through

But with the coming of the second set Miss Bundy's wallops began finding the lines. Her cross-court style of hitting soon had her seasoned opponent wheezing like a Stanley steamer. Dotty banged her way to leads of 4-1 and 5-3. At 5-3, with "Jake" serving, Dotty advanced to 0-40. But Helen stayed in there and pitched—pitched an unending stream of skidding chops at Miss Bundy.

"Jake" successfully weathered three set points, and when she pulled up even in that critical ninth game, Miss Bundy peevishly hurled her racquet against the stucco wall of the stadium. Jacobs finally broke through Bundy's tough serve in the twentieth game of the set to score a fine, plucky victory.

Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Cooke won the final quarter-final round encounter by taking the measure of the tall Philadelphia blonde, Hope Knowles in straight sets 6—4, 7—5.

Tomorrow's semifinal round matches pit Riggs against Schroeder, and defending champion Don McNeill against Frank Kovacs. In the women's semifinals, Pauline Betz and Margaret Osborne battle it out in an all-California match in one section of the draw, and Miss Jacobs tangles with Mrs. Cooke in the other.

Kansas City Pro Holds 3-Stroke Lead in Tam o' Shanter Open; Byron Nelson Second

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 5.—The $11,000 Tam o' Shanter Open Championship—current drama on the professional golf circuit—went through its second act today with the leading role still in the capable hands of that surprising young man from the Ozarks, Leonard Dodson.

He reeled off a four-under-par 68 early this afternoon for a 36-hole total of 133—a score which successfully withstood the efforts of such better-known experts as Ben Hogan, the year's leading money-winner, and Byron Nelson, former National Open champion. Dodson's halfway point total—his 65 of yesterday was seven under par—made him the player the field will have to catch in tomorrow and Sunday's final 18-hole engagements.

Barely Misses Record

Dodson, 29-year-old Kansas City professional whose story telling and wagering exploits have made him one of the game's most colorful personalities, might have set an all-time P. G. A. scoring record today. Out in 32, four under par, he was six under regulation figures through 15 holes. But at the par three sixteenth he took a five after a tee shot lodged at the base of a tree. He finished the nine in par 36. The 36-hole P. G. A. record is 130, set last year by Craig Wood.

Three shots back was that great finisher, Nelson, who today added a 69 to his opening round 67 for a 136 aggregate. Nelson went out in 34 but could clip only one shot off the card on the home trip.

Third place went to another stellar money player, Hogan, the little star from Hershey, Pa., who leads the pack in money winnings for the season. Ben, no ball of fire yesterday with a 73, blazed his way back into the top money picture with a brilliant 66 on nines of 34-32.

Four Are Tied at 141

Back of Hogan at 140 were Al Huske, of De Kalb, Ill., with rounds of 69-71, and Henry Ransom, of Fort Worth, Tex., with a pair of 70's. Jim Milward, of Madison, Wis., Herman Keiser, of Akron, Ohio, Jim Turnesa, of Camp Lee, Va., and E. J. Harrison, of Little Rock, Ark., were in the 141 bracket, with the field well strung out from this point on.

Among those who held 142 totals was Vic Ghezzi, the PGA champion, while Sam Snead was at 143, two shots under the 36-hole total held by Craig Wood, the National Open champion, and Lawson Little.

Low amateur at the halfway pole was Walter Burkemo, of Evanston, Ill., with a 36-hole total of 145. Willie Turnesa, former National Amateur champion, who had a 74 yesterday, played the out in 40 today and then withdrew.

Scores of the leaders:

Leonard Dodson, Kansas City	65	68—133
Byron Nelson, Toledo, Ohio	67	69—136

Auker's 5-Hit Pitching Stops Chisox, 3 to 1

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 5.—Elden Auker pitched five-hit ball as the St. Louis Browns defeated the Chicago White Sox, 3 to 1, before 22,691 persons tonight. The loss dropped the White Sox back into a second place tie with the idle Boston Red Sox.

It was the sixth straight time in the last month that the Browns had beaten the Chicagoans. The Sox previously had taken 10 to 13 games from the St. Louisians.

Auker, who turned in his season's fourteenth victory and his fourth over the Sox, had trouble only with Shortstop Luke Appling, who had a perfect evening with a double and two singles. One of Appling's singles scored Taft Wright with the Sox's lone run.

Wally Judnich's triple off Buck Ross in the fourth drove in one run and another scored on a fly, Auker, who walked, scored on singles by Don Heffner and Harlond Clift for the other St. Louis run off Ross in the fifth. Ross was forced to retire with a pulled side muscle in the seventh.

Pirates Gain Split in Bill With Reds

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 5.—Rain helped the Pirates gain an even split with the Reds here today before a crowd of 4897, when a storm broke in the seventh inning of the nightcap with the Bucs leading, 1 to 0. The Reds took the opener by overcoming a three-run Corsair lead with eight runs in the eighth, to win, 10 to 4.

Eddie Joost's third homer of the year with the bases filled climaxed the outburst. Loose play in the infield set the stage for the Reds' big surge and gave Paul Derringer a victory and caused Max Butcher a defeat. Five of the eight markers were unearned.

Rookie Alf Anderson collected four hits for the Bucs in the opener.

Ray Starr, 34-year-old righthander brought up by the Reds from Indianapolis last week, lost his first start in the second contest to Lloyd Dietz. The Bucs tallied the only run of the game in the sixth on Anderson's single, a sacrifice and Elliott's double.

The Buccaneers took three of the four game series, moving to within one-half game of the third-place Reds.

Redskins Get First Test in Game Tonight

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

San Diego, Calif., Sept. 5.—The Redskins will battle among themselves tomorrow night. For the first time this year, the Washington pros will meet under regular game conditions, and this city is going for the show in a big way. The squad has been divided into two teams, with Ray Flaherty coaching the west group and Turk Edwards the East group.

With the local police relief association cutting in on the proceeds, more than 12,000 persons are expected to see the battle. To insure an at-home Redskin touch, the Marine Band of 150 pieces will entertain.

This is the first of three major tests which are supposed to give Coach Flaherty a proper line on his men. Both teams have held secret practice and with many jobs at stake no punches will be pulled. Each club has a good share of the rookie material. Frank Filchock will do the passing and directing of the East Club while Sammy Baugh will lead the West.

The Redskins had their valedictory workout this morning at the Born Military Academy Field. Signal work, passing and kicking occupied more of the two hours. Ed Justice and John Stonebraker limped around favoring lame knees while three players did not take part in the drill. Fred Davis, Jim Barbara and Steve Slivinsky have foot infections of the boil type. However, it is probable that they will see action at Balboa Stadium tomorrow night.

Redskins Prove A Bust at Naval Smoker on Coast

By the Associated Press

San Diego, Calif., Sept. 5.—The Washington Redskins, who lost the 1940 National Professional Football Championship to the Chicago Bears, 73-0, collapsed again.

Guests last night at a naval training station smoker, the squad of 46 players was herded into the station's boxing ring for a mass introduction.

Giants and Bears In Pro Preview

Chicago, Sept. 5 (INS).—The Chicago Bears, National Football League champions and more recently 37-to-13 victors over the College All-Stars, and the New York Giants, with a 20-to-3 victory over an Eastern All-Star collegiate team this week, will meet in exhibition game at Wrigley Field tomorrow night.

David Johnsen Wins Over Mako at Net

By the Associated Press

Elizabeth, N. J., Sept. 5.—David Johnsen, of Washington, who was graduated from George Washington University last June, knocked second-seeded Gene Mako, of Los Angeles, out of the Eastern New Jersey clay courts tennis tournament today, 4—6, 6—3, 6—0.

Mako, who had drawn byes into the third round, found the going rough on the clay after his recent play on the turf at Forest Hills, N. Y.

Johnsen got off to a quick lead in the last set. Earlier in the day he had difficulty in disposing of Stanley Bellows, of Summit, 6—3, 3—6, 6—1.

In another upset, Frank Bowden, of New York, seeded third, was eliminated in the third round by Leonard Hartman, Brooklyn, 6—3, 6—3.

Others who joined Hartman and Johnsen in the quarter finals were Eddie Moylan, Trenton, seeded seventh, who won by default from Richard Bender, Westfield; George Toley, Los Angeles, who won from Paul Janjakowsk, Rahway, 6—2, 6—3; Harris Everett, Jacksonville, Fla., seeded fourth, who defeated Billy Burke, Elizabeth, 6—0, 6—3; Billy Umstaedter, Millburn, who defeated William Lurie, New York, 3—6, 6—2, 6—4, and Wayne Sabin, Reno, Nev., top seeded, who eliminated Bob Kerdasha Ridgewood, 6—4, 6—4.

Doyle Royal, of Washington, was eliminated by Kerdasha in the first round earlier today, 6—2, 6—3.

Baltimore Player Goes to Red Sox

Baltimore, Sept. 5 (AP).—Manager Tommy Thomas said today Al Flair, first baseman for the Baltimore Orioles of the International League, would join the Boston Red Sox following tonight's double-header with Jersey City.

Zydowsky Plays 9 Spots In 9 Innings

By the Associated Press

Tulsa, Okla., Sept. 5.—Ed Zydowsky, the Texas League's Jack-of-all-trades, will demonstrate his amazing versatility Sunday night by playing all nine positions in a game with the Beaumont Exporters.

The "Mild Russian," whose ability to patrol any area on the field has been a life saver for the second place Tulsa Oilers, will devote one inning to each spot during the game, last on Tulsa's regular season schedule.

It'll be a ragged evening for the scorekeeper, who will have to list nine symbols back of Zydowsky's name in the box score, but nothing burdensome for the 6-foot, 200-pound Tulsan.

This year the 21-year-old diamond tourist, who is owned by the Chicago Cubs, has played first base, outfield and shortstop for the Oilers and now is working behind the plate.

Zydowsky, who neither smokes nor drinks, batted .390 and slugged in 150 runs for Hot Springs, Ark., of the Cotton States League last year. He has a quiet personality and Skipper Roy Johnson says, "He acts the same way—inconspicuous—whether he's had a good day or a bad one."

"He's obliging, too," asserts Johnson. "I needed a first baseman for an exhibition with Little Rock this spring and Eddie offered his services, although he never had played the position.

"Zydowsky hit a couple 9 miles that day and made two spectacular stops at first base."

Weill, Archibald's Manager, Scaled Ladder the Hard Way

By Tony Neri

To know the secret of success which has planted Joey Archibald, featherweight champion of the world, at the top of his class, one will have to explore the past history of Al Weill, astute manager of the Province jumping-jack. Weill began life in Alsace-Lorraine some 45 years ago but left at the age of 13 to seek his fortune in the New World. Two years later he embarked on a career in the pugilistic field.

He had been employed as a stock boy in a department store and his work consisted of boxing hosiery, a job in which Weill says, "I loined

AL WEILL

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The man who was the best pool player in Southern Ohio in 1932 does not propose to sit idly by while the Dodgers are trying to win the pennant. He's going to play shortstop for Brooklyn in the important series with the Cardinals next week.

POVICH

Lippy Leo Durocher is the guy, and he says he's had almost enough of this bench management. If the Dodgers lose the pennant, they'll lose it with himself in the line-up. He's benching Shortstop Peewee Reese during the crucial series with the Cardinals and is putting himself on the spot in a brave bit of strategy.

"Those Cardinal guys might try to bully Reese, but they won't get funny with me," proclaims the 5 foot 6-inch Durocher, who remembers all too painfully the errors of Rookie Reese in the last series with the Cardinals. "I'll match 'em spike for spike," added the little bantam who manages the Brooks.

It all boils down to the fact that with the chips down, Durocher wants to be in there with his ball club. He benched himself at the start of the season while cheerfully admitting that Reese would outhit him, but he never would admit that Reese was a better fielder. Durocher thinks quite highly of himself as a fielding shortstop and with reason enough.

Has Long Had Big-Shot Tendencies

He has been a considerable figure in baseball since the Yankees picked him up in 1925 and routed him through the minors before calling him up to the main office in 1928 when he helped the Yanks to win a pennant. He didn't earn his name, Lippy Leo, because he had nothing to say. Back in his early days with the Yanks there were complaints by his teammates that he talked too much for a minor figure on the club, with a batting average that was never better than .270.

Durocher had big-shot tendencies from the start of his big league career. Babe Ruth took a sort of liking to the little fellow and drafted him as his roommate. Durocher was broke, more often than not, trying to keep pace with the free-spending Ruth, but that didn't deter him. Somewhere he came up with the flashiest cars, the most eloquent clothes and other big-shot effects. The fact that his lowly batting average put his major league career on thin ice, and that a good many of his colleagues didn't like his show-boating never disturbed him. He was sort of under the wing of Ruth, and that was important.

When he batted only .246 in 1929, though, Manager Miller Higgins gave him the gate. Most American League managers regarded Durocher as a lucky little stiff who was fortunate to be with the pennant-winning Yanks, and they put in no claim when the Yanks asked waivers. The Cincinnati Reds took a chance on him at the $7500 waiver price and Lippy Leo went into the National League where he was to find his real fame in the majors.

It was while he was with the Reds that he showed the pool sharks of Southern Ohio that he had learned a thing or two about the ivories back in his Springfield (Mass.) home. He has a loving cup to prove that he won the championship of that section of Ohio, and with his thickly-pomaded pompodour, the flashy-cut of his clothes and the cockiness he always did own, he must have looked the part of a pool champ.

His Cincinnati teammates did not exactly fall in love with Durocher, whose batting fell off to .227 in 1931 and to the anemic figure of .217 in 1932, but they didn't mind that so much. What they did mind was Durocher's constant references to the Yankees and, indirectly, his own association with them. "He's just one of those guys who won't let people forget he once wore that word 'Yankees' across his chest," said the Reds' old timers. "He's a pain in the neck, and he'd better start getting some base hits."

In Element With Gas House Gang

Traded to the Cardinals in 1933, in the deal that sent Paul Derringer and three other players to the Reds, Durocher found his spot in the big leagues. Always on the rowdy side as a ball player, he found his element in the Gas House Gang and was an integral member of it along with Pepper Martin, the Deans, Jim Buttomley, Ducky Medwick and Franky Frisch. His dirty uniform was not out of place with that gang. His own popping off was scarcely heard above the din of the mouthings of the others. He was show-boating with license, and making enough hits to stay in the line-up.

The Cardinals were willing to abide his weak hitting in view of his talents at shortstop. He was in the thick of every argument in which the Gas House gang found itself embroiled. He was a tough little guy who knew how to protect himself against spikes or expose a few himself. When Manager Frankie Frisch retired to the bench, Lippy Leo took charge of the Gas House infield. He regarded himself as something of a boss, and apparently he made himself heard because when the Brooklyn Dodgers fired Burleigh Grimes as manager, Larry McPhail gave Lippy Leo the job of bossing the Brooks.

He hasn't done badly. He landed the club in second place last year and imparted to it his own fire. He steered McPhail into making shrewd deals for Medwick, Higbe, Wyatt, Wasdell, Owen, Herman and Walker. He transferred to the Brooks the old Gas House tactics of bearing down all the time, and set himself up as complete boss of the club.

He's doing very well now, what with his ball club leading the league, but apparently he isn't ducking any responsibility. He wants to be in the line-up when his Brooks play the Cardinals in that three-game series that may decide the pennant next week, and that's where he's going to be. He isn't asking his ball club to do anything he's not willing to try himself.

Some Inside Info on the Pros

Pieces of Haight:

San Diego, Calif.

Dear Boss:

These pros are admirers of good, hard football. After a good block or a good tackle, I have seen veterans pat the back of a youngster who is trying to win his job. But take it from Turk Edwards, who has played pro ball as man and boy, there's no room for a dirty player. However, a game that draws so many individuals is bound to pop up occasionally with one who believes he must add some punch to his gridiron ability.

HAIGHT

Close followers of Redskin activities perhaps will recall a certain game against Brooklyn a couple of years ago. The Redskins finally won by a comfortable margin, but the turning point of the game came as the result of some underhand work in the Brooklyn line.

The touchdown that was to transform the game into a rout for the Redskins came as the result of an 89-yard-drive that ate its way through the Dodgers in bites of 5 and 6 yards. No passes, no end runs—just an incessant pounding. During the entire march, the Redskins used only one play, a smash at the side of the line.

The story behind the story of that parade to a touchdown was told me today by Edwards. He said that Jim Barber was first to call his attention to the slam bang play of a Brooklyn guard across the line. "This guy just poked me in the face with his elbow," said Barber, "It might have been accidental, so I'm going to give him another chance."

In the plays that followed, the guard, a first-year player, began using not only his elbows but his fists, both on Edwards and Barber. They roughed the Brooklyn fellow individually, but it was after the Redskins got the ball on their 39-yard-line that Edward and Barber decided to go to work collectively on the football yap. In the huddle, they explained to the Redskin quarterback that they wanted the next play to come to their side of the line.

Well, Both Edwards and Barber charged into this guard and Andy Farkas, carrying the ball, picked up 5 yards through the hole. In the next huddle, Turk and Jim insisted that the same play be used. Again Farkas carried the ball and again he gained.

In every huddle from that point to the touchdown, Edwards and

Huskies Refuse Labor Union Grid Tickets for Selectees

By the Associated Press

The American Federation of Labor asked the War Department yesterday to investigate what the organization said was arbitrary refusal by University of Washington officials to sanction free distribution of football tickets by locals of the teamsters, unions to draftees.

The attitude of the university is incomprehensible to me," William Green, president of the federation, said in making public the request, unless it is based on antiunion prejudice. I don't see how the officials of this university can justify their refusal to permit Army draftees to attend these football games free of charge."

Green said that the teamsters' local union had adopted a plan to purchase 3500 tickets to each of the university's games and give them to the commanders of the Army camps for free distribution to draftees.

The federation president added that although the university had set aside that number of tickets for sale to service men, it refused to sell the tickets to the union.

Meanwhile, the federation disclosed that a group of West Coast A. F. L. unions had retained Joseph A Padway, A. F. L. general counsel, to institute proceedings to bring about revocation of the license of radio station KJR of Seattle.

The Federation said that KJR refused to permit the Mayor of Seattle to say over the radio that the university and the Pacific Conference had refused to permit the ticket purchases by the unions.

Mrs. Dale, Kenwood Golfer, Wins Corby Cup Tournament

Bags Net 77 For Victory At Columbia

Mrs. Betty Meckley Is Runner-up With Net 81, but Wins Gross With an 83

The girls from Kenwood, who've been collecting most of the silver in the District Women's Golf Association tournament this season, were on top again yesterday as Mrs. J. C. Dale won the Corby Cup at Columbia with an 88—11, 77.

Only two players out of the 74 starters were able to break 90, Mrs. Dale and clubmate, Mrs. Betty P. Meckley, who continued her uninterrupted string of low gross victories with an 83.

The closest thing to Mrs. Dale's winning net 77 was a net 81 by Mrs. Meckley but as she chose the gross prize, second low net went to Mrs. Woodlief Thomas, also of Kenwood, with a 45-48, 93—11, 82.

Mrs. Dale played consistent golf on the out nine to turn in 45 and coming back she posted a 43, including a four on the fourteenth hole, where the new champion took a putter from off the edge of the green and rolled the ball into the cup. She stayed away from any real trouble throughout the round and made only the one putt of any length.

Lowest by Five Strokes

Mrs. Meckley, who played the same course in 75 in the N. B. C. Tournament, had nines of 41 and 42 for 83 total, lowest of the day by five shots. The round included a quartet of three-putt greens, but otherwise fine golf from tee to green.

A four-way tie for third low net was broken by the matching-cards method and Mrs. J. F. Gross, the host club champion, won out with 46, 47—93—10—83. Kenwood took another prize, Mrs. A. A. McEntee at fourth low net with 45, 48—93—10—83. Mrs. Charles Lynch, Washington, won out for fifth low net with 47, 46—93—10—83, and Mrs. R. S. Butler, The Washington Post Cup champion from Kenwood, was sixth with 47, 46—93—10—83.

Complete Prize List

Mrs. Leo Butler, of Manor, completed the net prize list with 48, 51—99—15—84, as Mrs. W. L. Weible, president of the association, was drawn out with her total of 49, 42—101—17—84.

Only 33 cards were turned in by the starting field of more than twice that number. Mrs. T. F. Neblett's 90 was the third best score of the day, while Mrs. W. R. Stokes, the District champion, required 91 strokes. Two of the more prominent players, Mrs. Myron Davy and Mrs. L. G. Pray, were not on hand as they will compete in the Women's National starting Monday in Brookline, Mass. M. W. W.

Hoyas Lose Tom Ponsalle To U. S. Army

Mr. Whiskers struck at Georgetown University's football team yesterday for the first time and plucked from the Hoyas' none-too-strong group of line candidates one Tom Ponsalle, a 188-pound junior guard who was counted on for plenty of action.

Pansalle, who is 5.10 and hails from Bridgeport, Conn., is one of two Hilltop gridders who was in danger of the draft; the others for the most part being deferred because of advanced R. O. T. C. training.

Russ Sorce, 285-pound tackle from Pittsburgh, was to learn today whether the Army will accept him physically, but unofficial quarters indicated last night that Sorce probably would be excused because of excessive weight.

According to an Army spokesman, Sorce is far over the maximum weight for his height of 6-4. The Army is said to consider 176 pounds as the normal weight for a man of 6.3. Therefore Sorce at 6.4 scales approximately 100 pounds over the weight normal for his height.

The Georgetown squad was brought to its full strength of 35 players yesterday with the arrival of Mike Kopcik, 190-pound senior, end and Sorce. Kopcik arrived in time for the afternoon practice and impressed his coaches with his punting. Sorce, coming in around 4 p. m., was too late for the day's workout.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

Customary Trouble Among the Pros

New York, Sept. 5.—Timothy Mara, the old bookie who owns the football Giants, was cursing George Marshall, the Olympian laundryman who owns the Redskins, at the free-load party given after the Giants beat the All Stars the other night.

CONSIDINE

But Mara was getting cursed back. Marshall has a ghost curser, a fellow Marshall retains to curse Mara for him in absentia. The ghost curser waived just as much soiled linen at Mara as Mara could brandish, and it was regretted that Marshall himself wasn't present to deliver same to the loving hands of the wash lady at mangle No. 13, to insure its long life.

Mara finally won the cursing. Tim developed a magnificent set of pipes during the long years he was offering choice betting bargains, at odds of 5 to 7. Marshall's ghost curser's wind gave out, a tragic depletion when one considers that Marshall himself has an abundance of this commodity to spare.

Between Mara and the ghost curser sat the thin man. The thin man is Elmer Layden, the so-called czar of pro football—who will have to get spectacularly tough if he is going to gain even a measure of control over the league's quarrelling fish-wife owners. Layden took in all the profanity, all the charges and counter-charges. Occasionally he silently added another lump of ice to his sarsaparilla, for the words that were passing back and forth in front of his sharp, amused features were so hot they were making his drink steam.

More Amusement Than Trouble

We asked him what he hoped to do about the name-calling that goes on perpetually in his league.

"Nothing," Layden said, after a moment of earnest consideration. "Nothing, that is, unless I think this bickering interferes with the progress of the league. Right now I think that the Mara-Marshall trouble, and the Halas-Mara-Marshall trouble, is more colorful than harmful. Each in his own way loves this league more than anything else. Each is loyal to it, and will fight for it. That's the important thing. When their fights begin interfering with that loyalty, then that'll be time enough to do something about them."

Few remember that Layden played pro football. He is best remembered, of course, as one of the four horsemen and later as coach of Duquesne and Notre Dame. But he played a couple of years of pro ball, back in the middle 1920's when the sport was a crummy shambles, filled with fly-by-night promoters and teams and disorganized squads built around a celebrity. He barnstormed with a Notre Dame alumni team, sometimes playing Sunday after playing Saturday. He jumped from that to the Brooklyn Horsemen, then to the Rock Island (Ill.) Independents. Those names sound prehistoric now.

"I guess my regard for pro football started in those days," Layden chuckled. "I got paid well . . . plenty well. But after I went into coaching I got away from the pro game. And I think that the biggest shock I've had since I came back is the shock of seeing how much spirit the pros now have. It's a team sport now, where it was an individual's game when I was playing."

Quotes From Hither and Haight

Speaking of pro football, its coaches have for a long time been using uncomplimentary sports columns and news stories as a means of kindling dormant "college try" in the hearts of the mercenaries. But the most spectacular use of these was last year before the Bears-Redskins play-off game. Halas clipped a column in which Marshall confidently predicted that if the score was close the Redskins would win, because the Bears were intrinsically gutless. Halas, his face flushed with ersatz indignation, waved the clipping under the noses of the Bears—and sent out on the field perhaps the most ferociously aggressive football team of all time.

Between halves, when the score was umpty-nine to zero, Halas changed his tune. He jumped to the other spirit-inflaming extreme. All he said was, "Remember, men, it's $30 a minute, this half."

The gaudy score of that classic fiasco probably has become more deeply rooted in the public's mind than any other football score. There have been a thousand gags about it, but the best was written the other day by Walter Haight, the roly-poly Washington Post turf writer who is covering the San Diego Training Camp of he Reds. There was a convention of some sort in the players' hotel, and a nice, confused old lady delegate came up to Haight and sweetly asked, "Young man, are you a member of brotherhood 905?"

"No, ma'm," Haight said politely, "I'm Redskin 73-0."

Chesapeake Bay Fishing Fair Today

By the Associated Press

North Beach, Md., Sept. 5.—At dawn tomorrow scores of anglers, from youngsters to grandpappies, will drop their lines in Chesapeake Bay hoping to catch a big haul of fish and carry home coveted fishing trophies.

It's the Chesapeake Bay Fishing Association's sixth annual grand contest and some 6000 anglers from Maryland and from far-distant points out of State are expected to compete.

They're offering trophies and prizes for almost every fishing feat you can think of. There are trophies for the largest edible fish, the largest fish of a species taken, for the largest variety of fish, etc. Women will receive awards, too.

And extra prizes are at stake for the champion fish caller, the oldest, heaviest and laziest looking angler and for the best singing group.

Miss Mary Stinnett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Stinnett, of North Beach, will be crowned queen of the fishing fair at a ball at Seaside Park tomorrow night. The Misses Clara Tucker and Lois Dessez, of North Beach, and Helen Conner, of Washington, will be her attendents.

Ossabaw Heads Field In Foxcatcher 'Chase

Mayer Timber-Topper Among 13 Entered At Fair Hill Today; Horse Sale on Program

By Anne Hagner

Headed by Louis B. Mayer's topflight 'chaser, Ossabaw, a field of 13 entries comprising some of the country's best brush horses will jog to the post today for the Foxcatcher National Cup Steeplechase at Fair Hill, Md.

Ossabaw, second only to Cottesmore in steeplechase earnings last year, already has scored victories this season at Saratoga and Belmont and is expected to be an even-money favorite by post time, hunt meeting bookies being notoriously uncharitable about taking chances.

The risks will be there aplenty, however. By the time 13 horses have tried the 6-foot 4-inch brush fence that is the thirteenth obstacle on the course, anything can happen.

Even in the event of inevitable scratches, this 3-miles outing is due to be the finest offering on the fall hunt meeting schedule. In addition to Ossabaw, entrants are Stephen C. Clark, jr.'s Fay Cottage, E. B. Schley's Frederic II, Rokeby Stable's Meeting House, carrying the colors of Paul Mellon's Upperville, Va., stable; Brooks Parker's Court Man, C. Mahlon Kline's Our Sailor, Sellman Evans' Killimalock, Log Cabin Stud's Chuckatuck, Alvin Untermeyer's Kellsboro, and F. Ambrose Clark's La Touche, also a winner at Saratoga.

Third on the Card

The Foxcatcher, third on the card of four races, will be run at 3:45 p. m. (Eastern standard time). First outing, the Fair Hill Steeplechase over a 2-mile brush course, is at 2:45. A Pennsylvania Railroad train leaves Union Station at 11 o'clock this morning, making a special stop at Elkton, Md., in time for spectators to witness the sale of Deborah Rood's entire show string of 17 horses, beginning at 12:30 on the Fair Hill course. Taxis will be available to transport visitors to the scene.

Miss Rood's sale, most important auction of the season, will attract hundreds of Virginia, Maryland and District show and hunting folk. Best known of her hunters are big Dublin Venture, Moving Picture, Dormir d'Or and Silver Play, all winners at Madison Square Garden and many other top Northern and Virginia shows.

Swim Meet Tonight Opens Regatta Here

The first phase of the 1941 President's Cup Regatta will take place tonight at East Potomac Park pool, where stellar swimmers of Washington and other Eastern cities compete out-of-doors for the first time in the history of regatta tank meets. Splashing will start at 8 p. m. In the event of rain the affair will be moved to the Shoreham's Venetian Pool.

Following tonight's opener, the regatta will be continued tomorrow afternoon off the Potomac Boat Club, where the rowing and paddling portion of the annual classic will be held. Next Saturday and Sunday hostilities will be concluded with sailing races off Hains Point. As previously announced, there will be no motorboat races in deference to the Eastern shortage of gasoline.

Tonight's program will consist of 100-meter races in freestyle, breast stroke and backstroke for both men and women, a 300-medley relay for men, a 150-meter medley swim for women, a 50-meter freestyle for boys under 16, and 50-meter freestyle, breast stroke and backstroke for novice girls.

Largest team entry has been filed by the Washington Airport—30 of the total of 104 natators who will compete.

The 300-meter medley race for men is expected to furnish the hottest competition. Penn A. C., of Philadelphia, and Baltimore's Knights of Columbus teams each have two legs on the trophy but their quest for a third may hit a snag in the small but potent squad from the St. George Dragon Club, of Brooklyn. The same trio—Arthur Anderson, Arthur Campbell and Lester Kaplan—which last year set a record of 3 minutes 12.8 seconds in winning the event, is again being tossed into the arena by Coach A. E. Johnson.

Nearly 100 Enter Post's Table Tourney

With its entry list swollen to within a half dozen of an even hundred, the Federal Employes'-Washington Post table tennis tournament starting at the Ice Palace this afternoon at 3 o'clock is an assured success.

Sports officials of The Post and the Ice Palace want to stress the point, however, that is is not too late to bring in the coupon so long as it is received at the table tennis courts by 2:30 this afternoon.

The draw will be in readiness for the play to commence at 3, but participants may report at 1 o'clock for pre-tournament practice if wished. Payment of the 40 cents entry fee allows continued play after elemination in early rounds as well as Sunday when the finals will start at 3 o'clock.

Three classes are available—men's, women's and novices'—and officials state that any paddler, regardless of expertness, may win one of the handsome trophies or medals as every player will be placed in his or her proper classification.

Further information may be secured from Lou Fields, Ice Palace table tennis manager, at EM. 8100.

Mrs. Dickey Wins Army-Navy Play

Mrs. G. Dickey was far out front yesterday as the Army-Navy Country Club staged its weekly ladies day tournament, a match play affair against par with full handicaps. Mrs. Dickey scored a minus 1, while the next best round was being recorded by Mrs. W. E. Mackintosh, a minus 5. Mrs. D. O. Hickey was third with minus 6.

The ladies' club championship will open Monday at 8:30 a. m. with an 18-hole-qualifying round, it was announced. All contestants are requested to contact Mrs. W. E. Sadtler at Jackson 1653-W today or tomorrow.

Village Motors' Nine To Play Maccabees

The Village Motors baseball team will send either Lefty Porter or Aaron Silverman to the mound tomorrow when the Arlington Maccabees are met at 3 p. m. on the Ballston Stadium diamond in a Washington-Virginia League game. Lanny Burch will hurl for the Maccabees.

Nats Purchase Two Players From Minors

A shortstop hitting .350 and a second baseman hitting .305 were bought by the Nats yesterday from their Chattanooga farm club in the Southern Association for delivery this month.

President Clark Griffith announced that Hillis Layne, the shortstop, and Charles Letchas, the second baseman, would report to the Nats for a tryout immediately following Chattanooga's completion of play in the post-season series for the league pennant.

Technically, the two players have belonged to the Washington system since the Nats took over the Chattanooga franchise last May, but their actual purchase at this time was dictated by the fact that they would be subject to draft by big league clubs after September 10.

Griffith deems both players far more valuable than the $6000 draft price they would command. The Chicago Cubs already have offered Chattanooga several times that amount for Layne's contract, he declared.

Hit .350 in Minors

Layne, a tall, slender, left-handed hitter, is recommended as a counterpart of Cecil Travis. His batting average has never dropped below .350 this year, and, like Travis, he is a left field hitter. At shortstop, he has been playing out of position. His natural position is second base, but Letchas has been a superior fielder at that job.

Letchas, smaller than Layne, is a right-handed hitter and like Layne has been one of the club's chief run-producers. He will see service immediately at second base upon reporting to the Nats, and the job is expected to evolve into a three-cornered battle among Layne, Letchas and Jimmy Bloodworth.

Manager Bucky Harris will also give Layne a shot at the shortstop job, with a view to restoring Travis to third base if the Chattanooga rookie proves adequate. The two rookies are expected to join the Nats before the middle of the month.

Nats Play A's

Today the Nats are in Philadelphia for the first of a pair of doubleheaders with the Athletics, whom they hope to overhaul in their battle to escape from the cellar. The A's have a 2½ game grip on seventh place, but Harris will start Rookie Early Winn in one of the games.

The Nats' next home game in Washington will be the final night contest of the season, when the Chicago White Sox open a series under the lights on Tuesday. All seats are reserved, with tickets on sale at the Stadium only.

Manager Harris announced yesterday that Infielder Morris Aderholt, who had joined the Nats from Springfield in the Eastern League, where he hit .321, had been released outright to the Nats' Charlotte farm.

—And the Manager Watched the Game From a Tombstone

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Sept. 5.—The Virginia League, which is having a little warfare all its own during these troublous times, saw another little flurry of attack and counterattack at the Salem-Harrisonburg game last night.

Nick Rhabe, of Harrisonburg came charging into Steve Sloboda at third as the Salem infielder stood calmly waiting to make the putout. A few blows were exchanged, but the activity was ended abruptly by Red Archer, Salem catcher, who trotted down from the home plate, hoisted Rhabe aloft and tossed him into a mud puddle. Rhabe was banished from the game.

Meanwhile, Manager Guy Lacy of the Lynchburg Senators, banned as a player or spectator during the Shaughnessy series because of his antics, watched his team trounce Petersburg by standing atop a tombstone in a cemetery outside the park.

Marandan Wins in Jackson Purse; Nine Cash $696 'Double'

Closing Drive Nets Victory In Feature

'4-6' Combination Brings Largest Pay-off of Meet; Marandan Pays $6

By Clocker Mike

Timonium, Md., Sept. 5.—The Howard W. Jackson Purse was billed as the feature event on the card here today, but to the nine customers who were fortunate to purchase the "4 and 6" combination the daily double was the big thing—to the extent of $696.

Everett Brinting's Marandan took the front end of the Jackson purse, a 6½ furlong event, in 1:22 and brought his backers a $6 pay-off, but that was secondary to the fans after Camp Meeting and Golden Dial raced to victory in the first two events to bring in the largest "double" of the meeting.

Camp Meeting, racing in the interests of P. H. Faulconer, took command and approaching the first turn and held on long enough to eke out a nose verdict over the favored Royal Mowlee. Ecoway, a first time starter which was well bet on, finished third.

The winner, a 2-year-old son of On Watch, was cleverly handled by Apprentice G. Acosta and covered the 4½ furlongs in 57 4-5. The straight mutuel on Campmeeting was $36.40.

Clay Hill Beaten

In the second race, the fans bet on several good things, the most prominent being Pay Lode. Crimson Lancer and Shotagin were also well played. However, there were at least nine people in the crowd yelling their heads off when Golden Dial came charging to the wire in front. Crimson Lancer and Pay Lode followed the winner across the line. The time for the second race was 1:23 2-5 and Golden Dial paid $31 in her own right.

The Jackson Purse, better known as the fifth race, saw Marandan score a front-running victory by a length and a half clear of Clay Hill. Ring Up, an invader from the larger tracks, finished third after being in that spot throughout the race.

(2), by On Watch—Camp Meat. Trained by C. H. Fitzgerald. Value to winner, $325; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:57⅘.

CAMP MEETING took command and escaped crowding at the first turn, held on under pressure and just lasted to stave off the bid of ROYAL MOWLEE. The latter, much the best, was almost knocked down at the first turn, got in close quarters on the rail and finally got through to be wearing the winner down. ECOWAY was forced to race on the outside throughout. CALAIS forced the pace of the winner for three-eighths and faltered. The start was very bad.

PAY LODE was within striking distance from the start, but was not good enough. SHOTAGIN showed in front for a half and then faltered. SWEET HENRY lost his rider going into the first turn.

Dear Al:

I hate to be a knocker to all the tracks but that jumping race they had here Thursday should stop steeplechase racing on half-milers for all time. That was the worst exhibition seen around here in a long while. In all a total of six out of the eight entries lost riders or fell at one stage of the two-mile course. Forest Ranger was remounted and finished third. Worthful was remounted and finished but had eliminated one lap. He was taken back on the infield course and while making the last round he again lost his rider. Once again Jockey J. Velas remounted and finished to take the fourth money of $25. After he was pulled up, the horse was so tired that he nearly keeled over. I think there were plenty in the crowd who would have pitched in and given them the money if they were that hard up. The officials have had the jump remodeled and it should be a whole lot better now. But it evidently didn't hurt the horse, I see he's in again today. I wouldn't be at all surprised if they called the jump off today. I see they have a substitute carded. Apprentice R. D. Scott might get a break after riding a double on Thursday. He is lots better than some of the "bug" boys seen around the smaller circuits. Our old friend Grand Duke is in the entries today. That is the veteran that used to perform for Mrs. A. J. Abel. Whitey sold him to Mrs. R. J. Fisher. Karl D. Kolseth reports that H. G. (Guy) Bedwell has again taken over the horses of Breckenridge Long. This stable was in the hands of Dion Kerr during recent months. Bedwell also has a number of his own performers at the 'Graw and is resting them until the coming meeting. They tell me that Level Best, the 2-year-old filly champion of last year, is training very well at the Harford County track. She has always liked that track and will be tough to whip there. General Manager Eddie Burke is scheduled to arrive from New York this weekend to get the 'Graw in readiness for the coming season. BILL.

First race—TOVARICH won so well here the other day that it looks like you have to take her right back. Has plenty of speed and that's what they need on these turns. OLYMPIAN beat STEEL BEAM at Marlboro. CHIEF TEDDY is better than ever. Forget MALVOIS' last race.

Second race—DEODO was out of the money last out but his race was better than the form will show. May take this at fair odds. CHANCER is good and fit and must be contended with. HAPPY HOSTESS is as good as her recent winning effort, would indicate.

Third race—As long as they insist on running these races I guess we have to pick something. FLYING FALCON looked like a sure winner last out when he lost rider at that bad jump. WAR PORT beat the top one in that effort but I don't believe he can repeat. LONE GALLANT was second in the same race.

Fourth race—QUICK VINE was a good second last out and may take the lead and hold on with this kind. MR. JIM was beaten by ZAC PAM last out and is a factor. Throw out that last race of NOON STEP'S and he could be dangerous.

Fifth race—I might be getting a little high on FLAG ETTA but I'm taking her to lick this field. Has plenty of the much needed early foot and will go this distance. MIGHTILY has a little more class than these but prefers a distance. SCHLEY AL has a good race here.

Sixth race—RIVER BROOM ran a different race last out and went right to the front only to weaken in the lates stages. Will have the consistent JUSTA JIMMIE to beat for top money. BULL TERRIER would be a real threat if started.

Seventh race—IDA TIME should take a long lead off her rail position and appears capable of holding these safe. She has gone way back and may find it tough to whip GIMPEY. TIME SCOUT can't be as bad as recent races would indicate.

Eighth race—PEPPERY seems to be the champ over this track and should make it three in a row. TRANSDAY showed a good race last out after going in the air at the start. QUILL was a good winner last out.

Sub race—If this is used, I'll take SCOUT ABOUT, REAL BOY and SUN SCENE.

Best bet—PEPPERY.

Capital Store Sales Up 31% During Week

Washington department store sales in the week ended August 30 were 31 per cent higher than in the corresponding week a year ago, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported last night. The local volume was 36 per cent heavier than in the previous week, it was noted.

Some of the gain was attributed by officials to increased purchasing during the final week of unregulated installment buying before the Reserve Board's restrictions went into effect on September 1.

For the four weeks ended August 30 store sales here were 39 per cent improved over the same period last year, the bank reported. Sales in the Fifth Federal Reserve District in the week ended August 30 were 31 per cent heavier than last year and 44 per cent better than in the previous week this year. The district as a whole showed a gain of 41 per cent in the four-week period.

The week's increases reported for other Federal Reserve Districts included: Boston, 22; New York, 21; Philadelphia, 26; Cleveland, 37; Atlanta, 36; Chicago, 30; St. Louis, 37; Kansas City, 25; Dallas, 42, and San Francisco, 36.

The Outlook

Provision for Higher Federal Income Taxes Absorbs Virtually All of Profit Increases

Broadly speaking, the Administration thus far appears to be making good on its dictum that there should be no war-time millionaires. This is shown factually in a survey by the National Industrial Conference Board which indicates that provision for higher Federal income taxes in the second quarter of this year has absorbed virtually all of the profits realized from increased production.

Analysis of the income statements of 421 industrial companies discloses that net income after taxes increased only 1 per cent from the first quarter to the second, although the Federal Reserve unadjusted index of industrial production rose 9 per cent. The aggregate amount laid aside for Federal taxes by 173 corporations, which made public these details, was 57 per cent of earnings before taxes, compared with 48 per cent in the first quarter.

Where the new streamlined short form of accounting is adopted, the confusion resulting from high profits before taxes is obviated, for this new technique lists taxes as a cost, and shows the residue available for owners of the tools (assets) after all other costs have been met.

The effect of taxes is to reduce corporate net earnings despite the armament boom. A study indicates a less favorable showing in the first half of 1941, despite the increased volume, than in the fourth quarter of 1940. In other words, the tax collectors have confiscated all of the profit benefits to industry which come from increased volume of business without a corresponding rise in overhead. The conference board index in the first half of 1941 stood at 159 per cent of the 1935-39 average, compared with 163 per cent in the fourth quarter last year.

Whether the New Deal policy of limiting war profits will succeed for the duration depends on the course of the current fight against inflation.

Any tendency toward a runaway inflation would of course elude the legalistic barriers, and tend to enrich fast moving speculators while impoverishing multitudes of workers and savers.

In view of the decision of the Senate Finance Committee to lower personal income tax exemptions to bring in millions of small earners, it is appropriate that big business should not be making a killing.

And yet this point should not be labored too much.

For with more than 12 million Americans owning corporate shares, the little stockholder and the moderate sized stockholder are penalized by these deliberate restraints on corporate earnings.

Since it is apparently established public policy to take much of the cash profit out of war, it behooves prudent corporate executives to take a long view of how best to exercise their virtual trusteeship to their security holders during the emergency. From the outset of World War II, I have advised the wisdom of understanding true costs during an emergency, and of setting up out of current income adequate reserves against accelerated depreciation of war plants, against ultimate depreciation of inventories, against the hazard of sudden cancellation of war orders, etc.

It is the job of management to bring a company through the emergency unimpaired. This involves intelligent handling of such flexible items as relate to institutional advertising, pensions and bonuses to employes, and others which breed lasting good will.

Thomas A. Morgan, president of Sperry Corporation, recognizing these necessities, has announced a two-fold policy designed to cushion the post-war readjustment, substantial reserves are in process of accumulation earmarked for post-war purposes, and in addition the company on its own books is writing off war plants in three years, instead of five as contemplated in the Federal tax law. Although for tax purposes management must comply with the legal regulations, it has the discretion in its own thinking and planning of reflecting in accounts (other than for taxes) its own best judgment.

Hearing Is Set On Breakup of Associated Gas

By the Associated Press

The Securities Commission has called upon the trustees of Associated Gas and Electric Corporation to show why they should not immediately be ordered to dispose of interests in gas and electric companies operating in 22 States and the Philippines.

A hearing was fixed for October 28 and a reply to the order was demanded by October 17.

The trustees are Denis J. Driscoll and Willard L. Thorpe, who were appointed after A. G. E. Corporation and its parent, Associated Gas and Electric Co., entered bankruptcy proceedings in Federal Court in New York, January 1940.

The trustees were instructed to outline to the commission what they regard as a "single, integrated" public utility system as defined in the so-called "death sentence" of the Utility Act and to show why they should not be ordered to dispose of their interests in dozens of non-utility companies.

The commission made it clear that it was not ready to consider as part of the integrated system anything lying outside of New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, wherein operate many of the properties in the scattered, billion-dollar system built up by Howard C. Hopson.

The SEC said that A. G. E. corporation controlled directly or indirectly 175 subsidiaries in 25 States and the Philippines. These include 68 companies which are utilities as defined by the Holding Company Act, 42 water distribution companies and others which are holding, investment, transportation and other non-utility companies.

States in which subsidiaries operate include Arizona, Arkansas Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana Maine, Maryland, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina Texas, Virginia, Vermont and West Virginia.

Adams said that because of the illness of his associate, E. H. Little, president of the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., it was necessary that he return to his position as executive vice president of the company.

William S. Knudsen and Sidney Hillman of the OPM and Leon Henderson, price administrator, joined in a statement expressing regret at Adams' departure and praising his services.

Retail Sales Continue Spurt Despite New Credit Curbs

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 5.—Buying in retail stores entered the fall selling season this week with vigorous demand for most all lines of merchandise, and sales volume averaged 23 to 28 per cent above a year ago for the country as a whole, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

Most stores found business gains over a year ago well maintained despite the fact that at this time last year there was a strong upturn.

"Trade apparently took in its stride the new credit curbs affecting 25 classes of consumers' goods," the agency said. "In the first few days after the regulation became effective, appliance sales experienced no perceptible letdown.

"Furniture volume declined, but by no more than the expected amount, as promotional emphasis shifted from August sales of home furnishings to fall style goods. . . .

"In women's apparel, furs continued far in the lead, with coats and suits also moving well and dress sales beginning to pick up more briskly."

In the wholesale business, out-of-town buyers began to return to central markets to write new orders and to attempt to expedite delivery on the old. Christmas goods and fill-ins were in most demand.

New price revisions, covering a wide range of merchandise, were announced during the week. A leading maker of men's summer suits posted an increase of 6 per cent over a year ago. Some shirt prices held, others advanced 10 per cent. Felt hats were marked up again, with increases ranging from 75 cents to $3 a dozen. First prices on 1942 automobiles made public showed rises on most models of 15 to 20 per cent. Glassware was generally advanced 10 per cent. A line of rayon blankets was moved up 4 to 8 per cent. Southern canned tomatoes rose to the highest levels in ten years.

Gen. Electric Output Is 60% Defense Work

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 5.—Charles E. Wilson, president of General Electric Co., said today that "defense products certainly are rolling now from American factories and predicted constantly speeded up production for the future.

At a press conference after a meeting of the company's directors, Wilson disclosed that the big manufacturing concern, employing 120,000 persons, was devoting about 60 per cent of its output to defense products and that production was at the highest levels in history.

Orders Set Record

He said orders in the third quarter of this year would run higher than the $284,000,000 received in the second quarter and that the output for the first nine months of 1941 would run 60 to 65 per cent ahead of the like 1940 period when $287,000,000 worth of business was handled.

"Next year," said Wilson, "we expect to increase our operations at a similarly accelerating rate."

He said he did not speak for the defense industries as a whole but indicated he believed similarly great production advances were being made by other companies.

Net Not Increasing

The directors voted a dividend of 35 cents a share, the same as declared twice previously this year. Wilson said he thought that, despite the great increase of production, earnings would remain about the same in the last half of 1941 as in the first half.

He said the company was "ahead or on schedule" on two-thirds of all its defense orders and that very few items in the remaining third were more than a short period behind time. "But we anticipate catching up and getting ahead on these orders shortly."

As for the reputed bottleneck of airplane superchargers, the General Electric chief said his company actually was running ahead of schedule on this production.

He disclosed that a new Navy turbine plant would go into operation next year at Erie, Pa.

Truck Combine Is Defended at ICC Hearing

By the Associated Press

Additional testimony intended to show that merger of eight Atlantic seaboard trucking concerns would not create a monopoly was presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday as hearings were resumed on the proposal.

Associated Transport, Inc., of New York, is seeking ICC permission to acquire the eight companies.

H. E. Howell of the McCarthy Freight System, Taunton, Mass., presented a voluminous exhibit showing the competing lines operating in the areas served by McCarthy.

Similar exhibits were presented in behalf of other companies at previous hearings on Associated Transport's application.

U. S. Enters Case

Frank Coleman, of the Justice Department's antitrust division entered an appearance yesterday. The Justice Department has announced that it was interested in studying possible monopoly features of the proposal, but has not indicated whether it would actively oppose the application.

John Miller, general counsel of the Mason & Dixon Lines, Kingport, Tenn., who also represents about 20 other Southern truck operators, said he would present several witnesses in opposition to the application.

Appearances were entered by E. F. Lacey, Washington, representing the National Industrial Traffic League, and W. H. Ott, Chicago, representing the Atlantic States Shippers and Motor Carriers Committee. They did not take any position on the proposal, however.

Units Are Listed

Associated Transports proposes to acquire control of Horton Motor Lines, Charlotte, N. C.; Barnwell Bros., Inc., Burlington, N. C.; Transportation, Inc., Atlantic, Ga.; Southeastern Motor Lines, Bristol, Tenn.; Arrow Carrier Corporation, Paterson, N. J.; M. Moran Transportation Lines, Buffalo, N. Y.; Consolidated Motor Freight Lines, Hartford, Conn., and McCarthy Motor Freight System.

B. C. Seymour, New York, is president of Associated Transport, and H. D. Horton, of Horton Motor Lines, chairman of the board.

Each of the eight companies involved would receive 80 per cent of its tangible net worth in preferred stock, with additional common stock to be allocated on the basis of earnings. Total capitalization would be $6,200,000, including $1,500,000 of preferred stock to be sold to the public to provide funds for equipment and working capital.

This was an increase of 12,970 cars, or 1.4 per cent, compared with the preceding week; an increase of 143,945 cars, or 18.7 per cent, compared with a year ago, and an increase of 196,323 cars, or 27.4 per cent, compared with 1939.

Loadings for the week were the highest since November 2, 1930, when they totaled 934,715 cars.

A substantial rise in miscellaneous freight led the advance in carloadings, but declines in livestock and ore shipments held the gain to less than seasonal proportions.

McNutt Pictures U. S. Industry Decentralized

A picture of decentralized American industry—small factories tucked way among the hills and trees of the country, free from the possible danger of bombers—was drawn by Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt in a speech here last night.

Rural electrification has made this possible and may also reverse the march from farm to city, he declared at a Rural Electrification conference on "food for defense" at the Washington Hotel.

Keynote of the conference, attended by some 300 State and Federal nutrition specialists, school superintendents, health officers, RE-A and electric cooperative managers and representatives of extension services from nine Eastern Seaboard States, was struck earlier in the day by Dr. John W. Studebaker, commissioner of the U. S. Office of Education.

New York, Sept. 5 (AP).—A late rally advanced cotton futures today, trade and mill buying furnishing the impetus. The close was 4 to 7 points higher.

Aircraft Issues Strong in Unevenly Lower List; Retail Store Shares Also Show Buoyancy

New York, Sept. 5.—Renewed strength of airchafts and an assortment of specialties today propped a generally shaky stock market. While favorites got up fractions to 2 points or so, a number touching new highs for the year, the best that could be said was that the majority kept declines to minor fractions. Best advances were reduced in most cases at the close. The list got off to a hesitant start and resistance appeared when the aviations came to the fore around midday.

On the bullish side were business developments affecting individual issues and another runup in commodities which served to keep inflation temperature at least a shade above normal.

Chilling market sentiment, however, was the cloudier international picture. This included the attack of an unidentified submarine on a U. S. Destroyer in the North Atlantic and the President's assertion the sub-sea assailant would be "eliminated" if found. In addition, the problems of taxes, priorities and other controls persisted.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks ended with a net decline of .2 of a point at 43.4. Dealings were relatively lively at times and transfers for the day totaled 574,610 shares against 536,686 the day before.

Aircrafts were aided by reports of a speedup in production with output of military planes at the rate of about 50,000 annually expected within another 12 months.

Entering new high ground for 1941 were Boeing, Curtiss-Wright, Lockheed, Gimbel, Laclede Gas, Cuban-American Sugar, Schenley, Ward Baking preferred, Timken-Detroit Axle and Canada Dry. Well ahead were Douglas Aircraft, Glenn Martin, Texas Corporation and Richfield Oil. Western Union was up a point as the communications business expanded and progress was reported being made in the proposed merger with postal.

Retail spending momentum throughout the country enabled Gimbel and Woolworth to keep a shade in advance.

Rails refused to be sidetracked notwithstanding the brotherhood strike vote and less than seasonal increases in last week's freight loadings.

Shares on the losing end were United States Steel, United States Rubber, Goodyear, Sears Roebuck, American Telephone, Anaconda, Kennecott, Westinghouse, American Can, du Pont, Great Northern and Eastman Kodak. General Motors and Chrysler were unchanged.

Among fast upward movers in the Curb were Brewster Aero, Bell Aircraft, Cessna Aircraft and Pantepec. Lower were Gulf Oil, American Gas, Humble Oil and Phoenix Securities. Turnover here was around 148,000 shares compared with 149,000 yesterday.

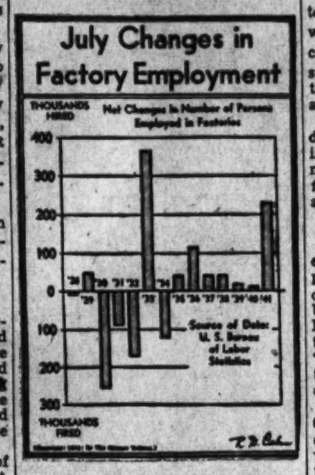
A small group of foreign dollar issues were pushed up 2 to around 4 points in today's bond market as the main domestic groups huddled together in a narrow range and refused to come out very far in either direction.

Obligations of German occupied countries and numerous South American nations made the best showing in the foreign division. Included were Antwerp 5s up 5 at 25; Belgium 7s, up 6 at 84; Copenhagen 4½s, up 3¼ at 29; Norway 4½s, up 3 at 42; Denmark 4½s, up 2¾ at 46¾, and Colombia 6s, up 1 at 43. Japan 5½s lost 2½ at 44.



Commodities Again Bound To New Peaks

By the Associated Press

Commodity futures bounded upward again yesterday, many to new high ground for four years or longer. Buying by manufacturers who feared further advances in the cost of their raw materials was responsible in some cases for the active demand.

Grains at Chicago advanced sharply, soybeans leading with an increase of 2¾ to 3¾ cents a bushel. Wheat closed 1¼ to 1⅝ cents a bushel. Hogs were steady to 10 cents a hundredweight higher, and cattle and lamb prices held about steady.

Late mill buying pushed New York cotton futures up 20 to 35 cents a bale. Cottonseed oil reached new 15-year high levels .33 to .58 of a cent above the previous close.

Anticipation of large Government cloth purchases sent wool tops futures up .1 to .2 of a cent a pound.

Strong demand for Cuban sugar was behind an advance of as much as .04½ cents a pound in world sugar contracts.

Advancing for the tenth straight trading day, the Associated Press index of 35 spot wholesale commodity prices rose to 93.47 per cent of the 1926 average, another new four-year high mark, compared with 93.12 the day before.

Odlum Takes Leave As Atlas Corp. Head

New York, Sept. 5 (AP).—Floyd B. Odlum today relinquished temporarily his duties as president of The Atlas Corporation, 100 million dollars investment company, to take charge of the new division of contract distribution in the Office of Production anagement. He was appointed to the post yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Sept. 5 (AP).—Buyers of grain forced prices of all important cereals upward 1 to almost 3 cents a bushel today to the highest levels since 1937. Soybeans were up more than 4 cents at one time, also to new four-year highs.

Offsetting profit taking sales that cropped out several times during the session and caused frequent price reactions, buying expanded as the day progressed, with all interests, including professional traders, investors and commercial and processing concerns, active. Many traders were covering previous short sales or reinstating holdings sold out recently. Flour business was reported more active and millers also were undersized to be in the market.

Smith's Homer Gives Kavakos 6-to-1 Victory

"Cannonball Jack" Smith starred in a new role last night at the Washington Softball Stadium as his Kavakos mates hung a 6 to 1 defeat on Census Bureau in the first of a three-game series for the Recreational championship of the District. With the scored tied in the fourth, and three runners on, Smith blasted one of Milt Hoffman's slants far over the left field fence for a grand home run.

Smith then retired to right field where he pulled the fielding gem of the game on Driscoll's near hit on the foul line.

The scheduled exhibition game between Standard Linen and F. B. I. was broken up by rain in the first inning. Census and Kavakos will play the second game of the series at Washington Softball Stadium tomorrow night.

Edgemere Tops Turf Card Today

By the United Press

The twenty-ninth running of the Edgemere Handicap at Aqueduct race track in New York, supported by the thirty-second Babylon, headlines the weekend horse racing throughout the United States with stakes also on the programs at Narragansett Park in Rhode Island and Washington Park in Illinois.

The Edgemere today drew a field of 10 with the Belair Stud entry of Roxbrough and Fenelon high weights for the mile and an eighth race. Their chief opposition is expected from Market Wise and Your Chance as all four horses make their last public appearance before the Narragansett Special.

The others entered included Devil's Crag, Omission, Nearsight, Royal Man, Parasang and Tola Rose.

Ben Whitaker's consistent Requested looms a heavy favorite over nine other 2-year-olds in the Babylon, a six furlong test.

At Narragansett Park, 13 thoroughbreds were entered in the $5000 Mary Dyer Handicap at a mile and a sixteenth while Mrs. Al Sabbath's Alsab, the best 2-year-old in the Midwest, headed six other juveniles entered in the six furlong $5000 Prairie State Stakes at Washington Park.

Hunt, Miss Morgan Win Net Titles

Chris Hunt and Dorothy Morgan are the 1941 Colored District of Columbia Recreation Department tennis champions, following matches this week on the Banneker courts.

Hunt former C. I. A. A. champion, had a slow start but came back to trip Maurice (Flip) Jackson in the finals, 3—6, 4—6, 6—4, 7—5, 6—4. Miss Morgan also had trouble warming up, but finally defeated Mrs. Florence Barnes, 2—6, 6—4, 7—5.

Jackson had his revenge for the singles beating in doubles, when he paired with Dudley Woodard to trip Hunt and Frank Perkins, 6—4, 4—6, 6—4, 7—5. Jackson also captured the mixed doubles, pairing with Mrs. Barnes for a 6—3, 4—6, 6—3 margin over Woodard and Miss Morgan.

Archibald's Manager Came Up Hard Way

boxing early and knew every sock there was."

The rotund manager met a pug one night and was invited to attend a fight. This Weill did. And from then on, was a manager, a job which has seen him steer two fighters to world titles and another, Arturo Godoy, to a championship shot at Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis. Besides Archibald, Weill managed Lou Ambers, that gallant lightweight king who recently retired.

Weill's One Rule

Weill, who is in town with Archibald while the featherweight is preparing for his 15-round battle with Chalky Wright next Thursday night, has one rule which has paid dividends in handling his fighters, and it is:

"Promise them nothin' and give them everything. Never ask a fighter for advice or he'll lose respect for you. Don't get too friendly with your fighter, or make a pal of him, or some mug will come along and move in on you."

Weill's contributions to the boxing game doesn't compare with his style in mastering the English language. In his "self-loined" English, he relates how he started in boxing, "it was my destination calling me."

Weill's career has carried him to the four-corners of the globe. On many trips he'd be away for months as his fighters engaged in bouts in every part of the country. He refers to these sorties as "bomb-stormin'" trips. At one time Weill had 19 fighters in bouts in 19 places in a single night. Until Ambers came along, Weill was content with the quanity of his stable more than the quality. Twelve fighters were a small string for him. But when the sugar began to come in, Weill concentrated his efforts on the Herkimer, N. Y., youth. He was well rewarded when Ambers won the crown.

Finds Green Pastures

Weill has also done wonders with Archibald. In a division which isn't as lucrative as the heavier classes, he managed to place Archibald in choice spots. Even in Archibald's last fight against Richard Lemos in California when he lost, Weill realized a nice profit.

In talking of his fighters Weill always uses the present tense. "I lose the fight to Lemos in California, sure, but only two days was I off the train from New York and I fight him in his own backyard. I didn't get a scratch. If they want me to fight him again, I'll fight him. If he wants to meet me here, it's O. K. with me," continued Weill.

Weill is bringing Archibald back to Washington on an $8000 guarantee. It is here that the Providence puncher gained his first recognition. In 20 fights he has yet to meet defeat in Washington.

The impending Archibald-Wright bout at Griffith Stadium will be the second involving the New York-Maryland championship within a few months inasmuch as Archibald regained his crown from Harry Jeffra last May here. The September 11 bout will be unique in that it probably will find the challenger, Wright, established an odds-on favorite at ring time.

"But the odds don't hoit Joey," asserts Weill. "I'll win the duke. I've never lost here yet."

Phila. Stars To Face Black Yankees Here

With the famed initial sacker, Oscar Charleston, as manager, the Philadelphia Stars, contending for the championship in the Negro National League, will clash in a doubleheader tomorrow at Griffith Stadium with the New York Black Yankees, the opener at 2 o'clock.

Jim West will be on first base for the Quaker City team, while Sandlot Johnny Duckett will hold down the hot corner opposite. The keystone will be composed of Lonnie Jordan, or Dave Campbell at second, and Johnny Dockett at shortstop. The hard-hitting and fleet-footed outfield consists of Roy Parnell, Hank Dorsey and Sylvester Qwens.

Chet Brewer, Henry McHenry and Lefty Walker will do mound duty for the Stars, being opposed by Bill Holland, Neil Rector and Bob Evans. The New Yorkers boast, in Kimbro, of the finest outfielder in the league, while Dick Seay and Harry Williams indicate the fine caliber of a smart infield.

37 Rounds On Amateur Boxing Card

At least 37 rounds of boxing will be offered ring fans Monday night at Turner's Arena on the District A. A. U.'s fourth card of the summer.

Billy Blake, chairman of the biffing committee, announced that Danny Petro, District 118-pound kingpin, and Tony Pikavetus of Baltimore will meet over a 5-round route and that efforts were being made to lengthen one more scrap from the customary three to five.

Charley Maimone and Cooper (Jack) White, or Lew Hanbury and Charley Petro may be the principals in the second 5-rounder. The Hanbury-Petro duel is a grudge affair and Lou is out to avenge Petro's upset victory in their first match a couple of months ago.

Maimone is toying with the idea of turning pro and White is a former West Virginia Golden Gloves Champion. Charley would like to try the longer distance to get an inkling of what the pro game is like and White is confident he can take him as easily in five as he can in three.

Five of the 11 bouts carded feature amateurs from Baltimore and are expected to generate some keen competition.

112 pounds—Dicky Mullins (N. T. S.) vs. Joe Cammarata.
118 pounds—Henry Ragsdale (Apollo) vs. Eddie Lloyd (St. Mary's).
118 pounds—Danny Petro (Apollo) vs. Tony Pikavetus (5 rounds).
135 pounds—Lew Hanbury (Merrick) vs. Charley Petro (Apollo).
126 pounds—Paul Coakley (Apollo) vs. Ray Claymore.

(First bout at 8:30).

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Hope West, 80, former member of the District Board of Education and widow of Henry Litchfield West, District Commissioner from 1902 to 1910, will be held at 2 p. m. today at All Souls Memorial Church, Connecticut and Cathedral Avenues Northwest. Burial will be in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Mrs. West, who served on the Board of Education from 1900 to 1906, died Thursday a year and a day after her husband, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Orville B. Drown, 3505 Worthington Drive, Westhaven, Md.

Born in Portsmouth, Va., a daughter of William Henry White and Mrs. Sarah Vernon Eskridge White, she came to Washington as a child and was educated in public schools here.

Active in affairs of patriotic organizations she had been historian of the Daughters of the American Revolution and registrar of the Daughters of American Colonists.

A student of geneology, she wrote "The Eskridge Family" and was co-author of "Sturman Family Notes" and "Foxhall Family Notes." She once served as historian of the Eskridge Family Association.

Mrs. West was a descendant of John Sater White, first mayor of Portsmouth, Va., and of Col. George Eskridge, who came from England to Virginia in 1690.

In addition to Mrs. Drown, she is survived by another daughter, Mrs. Morgan Stinemetz, of Nashville, Tenn., and a son, Vernon E. West, assistant corporation counsel of the District.

Electric-Shock Expert Speaks To Therapists

Don't become discouraged too easily in attempting to resuscitate an electric shock victim. With patience, the "dead" may be revived.

That point was emphasized yesterday by Dr. Hart E. Fisher, chief surgeon of the Chicago Rapid Transit Co., in an address at the closing session of the American Congress of Physical Therapy.

"Many times," he declared, "a physician arriving at the scene of such an accident and being told of the high voltage with which the person has come in contact, makes a superficial examination and pronounces the patient dead, only to be summoned later to find that the patient has been revived by artificial respiration performed by some layman." He said direct current was less dangerous than alternating current.

Dr. Fisher advocated inclusion of courses on electrical accidents in medical school curricula, widespread instruction of the public in rescue work and establishment of a clearing house of information on electrical accidents.

Myalgic headache, or "business man's headache," was described by Dr. H. L. Williams of the Mayo Clinic.

"It is the headache often suffered by those under nervous strain, men who have been working too intently at their desks without adequate periods of rest, or by the chronically nervous woman," he said.

The condition, betrayed by muscle pain at the temples, is sometimes confused with sinus trouble or arthritis, according to Dr. Williams.

Housekeeper Freed in Child Beating Case

Charges of assault and battery against Mrs. Nancy Warring, of Tulsa, Okla., were nolle prossed yesterday by State's Attorney Ben G. Wilkinson, in Bethesda (Md.) Police Court.

Mrs. Warring was charged with having assaulted two small children of Lieut. and Mrs. John J. Cook, 4815 Leland Street, Chevy Chase, Md., who had been left in her charge. The only witness was Paul Cook, 3½ years old, who could not qualify as a witness because he did not understand the nature of an oath.

Following objection to the testimony of the child by former Secretary of State Thomas L. Dawson, attorney for Mrs. Warring, Wilkinson said he would nolle prosse the charge if she would agree to remain out of the county. Trial Magistrate James C. Christopher concurred in the nolle.

Police charged that Mrs. Warring had beaten the children while she was minding them for their parents, who employed her as a housekeeper.

Railway Mediation Board Puts Strike Up to Roosevelt

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 5.—The path toward settlement of a multimillion dollar wage dispute threatening a strike on the Nation's major railroads veered directly toward the White House today.

Under the Railway Labor Act President Roosevelt held within his power the only apparent remaining step to prevent an actual strike—appointment of an emergency fact-finding board to investigate the controversy.

Negotiations between leaders of 125 class 1 railroads and 19 labor organizations representing approximately 1,250,000 employes collapsed August 5. Efforts of the National Railway Mediation Board to settle the dispute were abandoned today.

Its chairman, David J. Lewis, said the board was unable to persuade the disputants to agree to arbitration, which would be legally binding upon them.

Board Would Have 30 Days

Procedure under the act, therefore, is for the Mediation Board to notify the President that in its judgment a threat of interruption of interstate commerce—a strike—exists, whereupon the Chief Executive may appoint the emergency board.

Such a board would have 30 days to investigate and report back to the President. For another 30 days thereafter, the law states, there shall be no change in the status of the dispute.

The carriers' conference committee, headed by Fred G. Gurley, contended the wage increases demanded would amount to $900,000,000 a year, more than the railroads' net income for any one year. Union spokesmen estimated the increase at about $600,000,000 a year.

The weeks of more or less harmonious conferences aimed at settlement without resort to strike broke up today in a rapid fire series of announcements.

Strike Called for September 11

Chieftains of the 19 brotherhoods said their members had voted between 95 and 100 per cent in favor of authorizing a strike. Bert Jewell, spokesman for 14 nonoperating brotherhoods with 900,000 members, said they would strike at 6 p. m. September 11.

Alvaney Johnston, speaking for five operating brotherhoods with 350,000 members, said he would announce their strike date at Cleveland within 3 or 4 days.

Gurley's committee commented that the carriers were "disappointed" at failure of negotiations and mediation. He added that the managements were agreeable to arbitration but the unions had refused, a point which brotherhood spokesmen confirmed.

30% Increase Asked

Finally the Mediation Board members announced their efforts had been fruitless and they would return to Washington at once. They indicated they would not report to the President until the operating brotherhoods set a strike date.

Operating brotherhoods asked a 30 per cent increase, the lowest present wage rate being $5.06 a day for switch tenders. Nonoperating Brotherhoods asked a boost of 30 to 34 cents an hour from existing brotherhoods asked a boost of cents.

In case you didn't know, the Columbia Broadcasting System also does its bit in this country to keep foreign-speaking citizens informed of what's going on in the world.

The foreign-language programs are beamed toward Europe or South America by short wave, via C. B. S.'s international short wave station WCBX, but that doesn't mean that they can't be picked up on short wave receivers right here in the United States.

Which accounts for the grateful letter received this week by Mario Capelli, of the C. B. S. foreign language staff. It was from an Italian coal miner in Ohio and he told how he and his companions, who spoke little English and could read less, had their only news of the outside world from Columbia's short wave programs.

The letter was from Davide Dozzi, born in the Province of Udine in northern Italy, "but I was naturalized a citizen of the United States and I am very proud to be a resident of this great country."

In a labored hand, Dozzi wrote: "It is with real pleasure that I listen to your daily program of news which keeps me informed on developments on the European war front. Your programs are heard regularly by 90 other Italian born here who have not yet learned the English language. All of us work in the bituminous coal mines of Piney Fork. . . .

Contract Bridge

When Al Sobel, tournament director of the American Contract Bridge League, played the following hand at a grand-slam contract, he also claimed the balance of the tricks. Although in this case the opponents offered no dispute, Al's wife Helena, a life master, did. Here is the hand and the story in Al's words:

North-South Vulnerable

Helena	Alexis
♠ A J 4 2	♠ 5
♡ K Q 8 5	♡ A J 10 9 4
◇ Q 10	◇ A J 9
♣ K J 10	♣ A Q 9 3

"Helena opened the bidding with a spade and with very few waystations we arrived at a seven-heart contract, with the Old Master the declarer. South opened the nine of spades, up went the ace, and North vociferously played the queen. This was either the start of a come-on or a very short suit which I wanted to investigate.

"I led the deuce of spades and North completed the echo with the eight. Helena had looked at my hand and I could see her beaming when I led back the spade—her keen mind had already seen my plan.

"I drew trumps and since they broke three and one, I had to guess the diamond finesse. Since North was marked with the spade king, I decided to play South for the diamond king. After discarding dummy's ten on the fourth club, I led the diamond ace, followed by the queen, and when South hesitated momentarily and played low, I allowed the queen to ride and it held the trick. I showed the rest of the hand and waited for the madam's praise. It soon came:

"'Didn't you ever hear of a dummy reversal? You started off on the right foot by ruffing a spade. Why didn't you continue and ruff the other two spades high in your hand? You could discard your last two clubs on my two trumps, and then you wouldn't be forced to the diamond guess.'"
